WASHINGTON, Saturday, July 4—10:10 A. M.

The following has just been received:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC, NEAR GETTYSBURGH, Friday, July 3—8½ P. M.

Major-Gen. Halleck, General-in-Chief:

The enemy opened at 1 P. M., from about one hundred and fifty guns, concentrated upon my left centre, continuin without intermission for about three hours, at the expiration of which time, he assaulted my left centre twice, being, upon both occasions, handsomely repulsed, with severe loss to him, leaving in our hands nearly three thousand prisoners.

Among the prisoners is Brig.-Gen. ARMISTEAD and many Colonels and officers of lesser rank.

The enemy left many dead upon the field, and a large number of wounded in our hands.

The loss upon our side has been considerable. Maj.-Gen. HANCOCK and Brig.-Gen. GIBBON were wounded.

After the repelling of the assaults, indications leading to the belief that the enemy might be withdrawing, a reconnoissance was pushed forward from the left and the enemy found to be in force.

At the present hour all is quiet.

My cavalry have been engaged all day on both flanks of the enemy, harassing and vigorously attacking him with great success, notwithstanding they encountered superior numbers both of cavalry and infantry.

The army is in fine spirits.

GEORGE G. MEADE,
Maj.-Gen. Commanding.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5—4 P. M.

The latest official dispatch received here, up to this hour, from Gen. MEADE, is dated at Headquarters Army of Potomac, 7 A. M., July 4, which merely states that the enemy had withdrawn from his position, occupied for attack, on Friday. The information in the possession of Gen. MEADE, at that hour, did not develop the character of the enemy's movement, whether it was a retreat or a manœuvre for other purposes.

Reliable information received here to-day asserts that Gen. LEE's Headquarters were at Cashtown yesterday afternoon, and further represents that the rebels were fortifying at Newman's Cut, in the South Mountains, apparently to cover a retreat.

Later official dispatches are expected this evening.

SECOND DISPATCH.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC, July 4—Noon.

Maj.-Gen. Halleck:

The position of affairs is not materially changed since my last dispatch of 7 A. M.

We now hold Gettysburgh.

The enemy has abandoned large numbers of his killed and wounded on the field.

I shall probably be able to give you a return of my captures and losses before night, and a return of the enemy's killed and wounded in our hands.

GEORGE G. MEADE, Major-General.

THIRD DISPATCH.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY POTOMAC, July 4—10 P. M.

To Maj.-Gen. Halleck:

No change of affairs since my dispatch of noon.

GEO. G. MEADE, Major-General.

FOURTH DISPATCH.

WASHINGTON, Monday, July 6—12.30 A. M.

The following is the latest official dispatch:

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Sunday, July 5—9:30 A. M.

MAJOR-GEN. HALLECK: The enemy retired under cover of the night and the heavy rain, in the direction of Fairfield and Cashtown.

Our cavalry are in pursuit.

I cannot give you the details of our captures in prisoners, colors and arms.

Upward of twenty battle-flags will be turned in from one corps.

My wounded and those of the enemy are in our hands. GEO. G. MEADE, Major-General.

THE PRESIDENT TO THE COUNTRY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 4—10:30 A. M.

The President announces to the country that news from the Army of the Potomac, up to 10 P. M. of the 3d, is such as to cover that army with the highest honor; to promise a great success to the cause of the Union, and to claim the condolence of all for the many gallant fallen; and that for this, he especially desires that on this day He, whose will, not ours, should ever be done, be everywhere remembered and reverenced with profoundest gratitude.

(Signed) A. LINCOLN.

THE GREAT BATTLE OF FRIDAY.

Our Special Telegrams from the Battle-Field.

NEAR GETTYSBURGH, Saturday, July 4.

Another great battle was fought yesterday afternoon, resulting in a magnificent success to the National arms.

At 2 o'clock P. M., LONGSTREET's whole corps advanced from the rebel centre against our centre. The enemy's forces were hurled upon our position by columns in mass, and also in lines of battle. Our centre was held by Gen. HANCOCK, with the noble old Second army corps, aided by Gen. DOUBLEDAY's division of the First corps.

The rebels first opened a terrific artillery bombardment to demoralize our men, and then moved their forces with great impetuosity upon our position. HANCOCK received the attack with great firmness, and after a furious battle, lasting until 5 o'clock, the enemy were driven from the field, LONGSTREET's corps being almost annihilated.

The battle was a most magnificent spectacle. It was fought on an open plain, just south of Gettysburgh, with not a tree to interrupt the view. The courage of our men was perfectly sublime.

At 5 P. M. what was left of the enemy retreated in utter confusion, leaving dozens of flags, and Gen. HANCOCK estimated at least five thousand killed and wounded on the field.

The battle was fought by Gen. HANCOCK with splendid valor. He won imperishable honor, and Gen. MEADE thanked him in the name of the army and the country. He was wounded in the thigh, but remained on the field.

The number of prisoners taken is estimated at 3,000, including at least two Brigadier-Generals—OLMSTEAD, of Georgia, and another—both wounded.

The conduct of our veterans was perfectly magnificent. More than twenty battle flags were taken by our troops. Nearly every regiment has one. The Nineteenth Massachusetts captured four. The repulse was so disastrous to the enemy, that LONGSTREET's corps is perfectly used up. Gen GIBBON was wounded in the shoulder. Gen. WEBB was wounded and remained on the field. Col. HAMMELL, of the Sixty-sixth New-York, was wounded in the arm.

At 7 o'clock last evening, Gen. MEADE ordered the Third corps, supported by the Sixth, to attack the enemy's right, which was done, and the battle lasted until dark, when a good deal of ground had been gained.

During the day EWELL's corps kept up a desultory attack upon SLOCUM on the right, but was repulsed.

Our cavalry is to-day playing savagely upon the enemy's flank and rear. L. L. CROUNSE.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

GETTYSBURGH, Friday, July 3.

The experience of all the tried and veteran officers of the Army of the Potomac tells of no such desperate conflict as has been in progress during this day. The cannonading of Chancellorsville, Malvern and Manassas were pastimes compared with this. At the headquarters, where I write, sixteen of the horses of Gen. MEADE's staff officers were killed by shell. The house was completely riddled. The Chief of Staff, Gen. BUTTERFIELD, was knocked down by a fragment of case-shot. Col. DICKINSON, Assistant Adjutant-General, had the bone of his wrist pierced through by a piece of shell. Lieut. OLIVER, of Gen. BUTTERFIELD'S Staff, was struck in the head; and Capt. CARPENTER, of Gen. MEADE'S escort, was wounded in the eye.

While I write the ground about me is covered thick with rebel dead, mingled with our own. Thousands of prisoners have been sent to the rear, and yet the conflict still continues.

The losses on both sides are heavy. Among our wounded officers are HANCOCK, GIBBON and a great many others whose names I feel restrained from publishing without being assured that they are positively in the list of casualties.

It is near sunset. Our troops hold the field, with many rebel prisoners in their hands. The enemy has been magnificently repulsed for three days—repulsed on all sides—most magnificently to-day. Every effort made by him since Wednesday morning to penetrate MEADE's lines has been foiled. The final results of the action, I hope to be able to give you at a later hour this evening.

S. WILKESON.

DISPATCH TO THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Friday, July 3—6 A. M.

The enemy's guns opened on our left wing at daylight, apparently to feel our position. They found us "at home," and soon suspended operations. They also endeavored to push forward their front on our right, but were driven back with loss.

9:40 A. M.—An hour ago, the enemy made a strong infantry attack on our right, and endeavored to break our line. The Twelfth corps, which formed our right, steadily drove them back for half an hour, when the enemy were reinforced, and a portion of the Sixth corps was sent to its support.

Failing in this, the enemy opened a heavy cannonade all along the line. The attack on the right is believed to have been a feint to cover a more formidable flank movement on the left. The cannonading is now heavy in that direction, and appears to be extending.

The Third Corps suffered greatly yesterday. The number of wounded is heavy, with a large number of officers. No estimate can be formed of the killed at this writing.

Heavy musketry has opened now on our right again and cannonading on our left is slackening. The enemy are fighting with the greatest desperation. Nothing can surpass the vigor and precision of our artillery.

Yesterday, the rebels took two of our guns, for want of horses and infantry support, but the division (HUMPHREY'S, I think,) rallied and recaptured them. We took one from the enemy.

Comparatively few prisoners have been taken on either side up to this hour.

Ten o'clock A. M.—The cannonading has slackened.

Rebel prisoners say when their infantry charged our left-wing batteries yesterday, the massacre was beyond parallel. Some of the guns were masked, and did not open until the enemy were within canister range.

IMPORTANT SEMI-OFFICIAL DETAILS.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, July 5, 1863.

The decisive battle has been fought to-day, and the enemy have been repulsed with terrific loss.

At daylight Lee's right wing batteries opened upon our left, and shortly after one of his centre followed. After half an hour's cannonading, doing but little damage to us, the fire slackened, and only occasional shots were exchanged.

Shortly afterward the enemy's left, composed entirely of infantry and sharpshooters, made an attack on our right wing. So sudden and impetuous was it accomplished that our skirmishers and front line were driven back from their intrenchments; but, by the aid of the batteries in the rear, and the indomitable bravery of the Twelfth corps, we regained the first position, capturing a considerable number of prisoners.

Several hours of ominous silence followed this repulse. At 1 o'clock the enemy fired two shots, apparently as signals for the grandest artillery fight ever witnessed on this continent. Before a moment had elapsed it is estimated that at least eighty guns opened upon us. Our batteries returned the compliment with interest. The air seemed literally thick with iron, and for more than an hour it seemed impossible that man or beast could live through it. Strange to say the enemy's accuracy of range, as exhibited on the two previous days, was wanting on this occasion. Most of their shells exploded far in the rear of our front, and generally missing our batteries.

Under cover of this feu d'enfer, LEE advanced his columns of infantry from the covers, and made several desperate attempts to carry the lines by assault; but each successive attempt was repulsed with terrible havoc to their ranks.

After an hour's incessant cannonading the fire grew less intense for a short time, but was again renewed for a little while, with great spirit. During this period, some of our batteries whose ammunition was expended and the men exhausted, ceased to fire, and on the approach of the reserve batteries, withdrew to the rear. The enemy only seeing the batteries withdrawing, and mistaking this for a retreat, made a massed infantry charge up the hill, and obtained a position in our lines, cutting to pieces and almost annihilating the small infantry supports; but before they had time to rejoice at their imaginary success, the fresh batteries poured in a deadly fire of canister and case-shot. The infantry reserves joined on either flank of the gap, charged them, and added greatly to their destruction. They were completely surprised; and hundreds of them threw down their arms and asked for quarter. Nearly the entire brigade of Gen. DICK GARNETT surrendered, and GARNETT himself, wounded, barely made his escape.

Longstreet was mortally wounded and captured. He is reported to have died in an hour afterward.

About 4:30 P. M. the artillery of the enemy slackened and had entirely ceased at 5, the last shots which they fired being far beyond their original position, and the infantry columns had withdrawn to their covers.

We took upward of three thousand prisoners. The enemy captured but few if any of our men.

The rebel prisoners report that Gen. A. P. Hill was killed outright upon the field, and that their officers suffered far greater casualties than in any previous engagement.

So terrific was the enemy's fire that the small house where Gen. MEADE and Staff were quartered, was perforated by several shots. Many of the Staff horses were killed around the house.

Gen. BUTTERFIELD was struck in the breast, and it is feared internally injured, by a piece of shell which exploded in the building. Lieut.-Col. JOSEPH DICKINSON, of the Staff, had his left arm perforated by a flying fragment of shell, and it seemed a miracle that no greater damage was done to life or limb.

Several of our general officers were wounded in the engagement. Gen. HANCOCK was wounded in the leg. Gens. GIBBON, WARREN and HUNT were wounded. In consequence of the excitement and difficulty in ascertaining their locations, the names of many prominent officers reported as killed or wounded cannot be ascertained to-night.

Too much credit cannot be given to our artillerists, who for hours stood to their guns under a broiling sun, and surrounded by the missiles of death, retiring only to give their positions to others, when their caissons and limbers were exhausted of ammunition. The infantry engaged also nobly did their duty, and the enemy to-day at their hands has received the greatest disaster ever administered by the Union forces.

All officers award the highest honors to Gen. MEADE for the able generalship he has displayed since he assumed command, and particularly for his coolness, decision and energy on this memorable 3d of July.

Last night, believing it to be his duty to the cause, and to learn how far he would be supported in the approaching conflict, he summoned his corps and division commanders for consultation.

DETAILS FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF POTOMAC, Saturday Night, July 4.

Who can write the history of a battle whose eyes are immovably fastened upon a central figure of transcendingly absorbing interest—the dead body of an oldest born, crushed by a shell in a position where a battery should never have been sent, and abandoned to death in a building where surgeons dared not to stay?

The battle of Gettysburgh! I am told that it commenced on the 1st of July, a mile north of the town, between two weak brigades of infantry and some doomed artillery and the whole force of the rebel army. Among other costs of this error was the death of REYNOLDS. Its value was priceless, however, though priceless was the young and the old blood with which it was bought. The error put us on the defensive, and gave us the choice of position. From the moment that our artillery and infantry rolled back through the main street of Gettysburgh and rolled out of the town to the circle of eminences south of it. We were not to attack but to be attacked. The risks, the difficulties and the disadvantages of the coming battle were the enemy's. Our were the heights for artillery; ours the short, inside lines for manœuvring and reinforcing; ours the cover of stonewalls, fences and the crests of hills. The ground upon which we were driven to accept battle was wonderfully favorable to us. A popular description of it would be to say that it was in form an elongated and somewhat sharpened horseshoe, with the toe to Gettysburgh and the heel to the south.

Lee's plan of battle was simple. He massed his troops upon the east side of this shoe of position, and thundered on it obstinately to break it. The shelling of our batteries from the nearest overlooking hill, and the unflinching courage and complete discipline of the army of the Potomac repelled the attack. It was renewed at the point of the shoe—renewed desperately at the southwest heel—renewed on the western side with an effort conspirated to success by Ewell's earnest battle, and on which the fate of the invasion of Pennsylvania was fully put at stake. Only a perfect infantry and an artillery educated in the midst of charges of hostile brigades could possibly have sustained this assault. HANCOCK's corps did sustain it, and has covered itself with immortal honors by its constancy and courage. The total wreck of CUSHING's battery—the list of its killed and wounded—the losses of officers, men and horses COWAN sustained—and the marvellous outspread upon the board of death of dead soldiers and dead animals—of dead soldiers in blue, and dead soldiers in gray—more marvellous to me than anything I have ever seen in war—are a ghastly and shocking testimony to the terrible fight of the Second corps that none will gainsay. That corps will ever have the distinction of breaking the pride and power of the rebel invasion.

For such details as I have the heart for. The battle commenced at daylight, on the side of the horse-shoe position, exactly opposite to that which EWELL had sworn to crush through. Musketry preceded the rising of the sun. A thick wood veiled this fight, but out of its leaky darkness arose the smoke and the surging and swelling of the fire, from intermittent to continuous, and crushing, told of the wise tactics of the rebels of attacking in force and changing their troops. Seemingly the attack of the day was to be made through that wood. The demonstration was protracted—it was absolutely preparative; but there was no artillery fire accompanying the musketry, and charged officers in our western front mentioned, with the gravity due to the fact, that the rebels had failed from at intervals upon the edge of the wood they occupied in face of our position. These were breastworks for the protection of artillerymen.

Suddenly, and about 10 in the forenoon, the firing on the east side, and everywhere about our lines, ceased. A silence as of deep sleep fell upon the field of battle. Our army cooked, ate and slumbered. The rebel army moved 120 guns to the west, and massed there LONGSTREET's corps and HILL's corps, to hurl them upon the really weakest point of our entire position.

Eleven o'clock—twelve o'clock—one o'clock. In the shadow cast by the tiny farm house 16 by 20, which Gen. MEADE had made his Headquarters, lay wearied Staff officers and tired reporters. There was not wanting to the peacefulness of the scene the singing of a bird, which had a nest in a peach tree within the tiny yard of the whitewashed cottage. In the midst of its warbling, a shell screamed over the house, instantly followed by another, and another, and in a moment the air was full of the most complete artillery prelude to an infantry battle that was ever exhibited. Every size and form of shell known to British and to American gunnery shrieked, whirled, moaned, whistled and wrathfully fluttered over our ground. As many as six in a second, constantly two in a second, bursting and screaming over and around the headquarters, made a very hell of fire that amazed the oldest officers. They burst in the yard—burst next to the fence on both sides, garnished as usual with the blicked horses of aids and orderlies. The fastened animals reared and plunged with terror. Then one fell, then another—sixteen laid dead and mangled before the fire ceased, still fastened by their halters, which gave the expression of being wickedly tied up to die painfully. These brute victims of a cruel war touched all hearts. Through the midst of the storm of screaming and exploding shells, an ambulance, driven by its frenzied conductor at full speed, presented to all of us the marvelous spectacle of a horse going rapidly on three legs. A hinder one had been shot off at the hock. A shell tore up the little step of the Headquarters Cottage, and ripped bags of oats as with a knife. Another soon carried off one of its two pillars. Soon a spherical case burst opposite the open door—another ripped through the low garret. The remaining pillar went almost immediately to the howl of a fixed shot that WHITWORTH must have made. During this fire the house at twenty and thirty feet distant, were receiving their death, and soldiers in Federal blue were torn to pieces in the road and died with the peculiar yells that blend the extorted cry of pain with horror and despair. Not an orderly—not an ambulance—not a straggler was to be seen upon the plain swept by this tempest of orchestral death thirty minutes after it commenced. Were not one hundred and twenty pieces of artillery, trying to cut from the field every battery we had in position to resist their purposed infantry attack, and to sweep away the slight defences behind which our infantry were waiting? Forty minutes—fifty minutes—counted on watches that ran! Oh so languidly. Shells through the two lower rooms. A shell into the chimney that daringly did not explode. Shells in the yard. The air thicker and fuller and more deafening with the howling and whirring of these infernal missles. The chief of staff struck—Gen WILLIAMS—loved and respected through the army, separated from instant death by two inches of space vertically measured. An Aide bored with a fragment of iron through the bone of the arm. Another, cut with an exploded piece. And the time measured on the sluggish watches was one hour and forty minutes.

Then there was a lull, and we knew that the rebel infantry was charging. And splendidly they did this work—the highest and severest test of the stuff that soldiers are made of. HILL's division, in line of battle, came first on the double-quick. Their muskets at the "right-shoulder-shift." LONGSTREET's came as the support, at the usual distance, with war cries and a savage insolence as yet untutored by defeat. They rushed in perfect order across the open field up to the very muzzles of the guns, which tore lanes through them as they came. But they met men who were their equals in spirit, and their superiors in tenacity. There never was better fighting since Thermopylæ than was done yesterday by our infantry and artillery. The rebels were over our defences. They had cleaned cannoneers and horses from one of the guns, and were whirling it around to use upon us. The bayonet drove them back. But so hard pressed was this brave infantry that at one time, from the exhaustion of their ammunition, every battery upon the principal crest of attack was silent, except CROWAN's. His service of grape and canister was awful. It enabled our fine, outnumbered two to one, first to beat back LONGSTREET, and then to charge upon him, and take a great number of his men and himself prisoners. Strange sight! So terrible was our musketry and artillery fire, that when ARMISTEAD's brigade was checked in its charge, and stood reeling, all of its men dropped their muskets and crawled on their hands and knees underneath the stream of shot till close to our troops, where they made signs of surrendering. They passed through our ranks scarcely noticed, and slowly went down the slope to the rear in the rear.

Before they got there the grand charge of EWELL, solemnly sworn to and carefully prepared, had failed.

The rebels had retreated to their lines, and opened anew the storm of shell and shot from their 120 guns. These who remained at the riddled headquarters will never the crouching, and dodging, and running, of the Butternut-colored captives when they got under this, their friends, fire. It was appalling to as good soldiers even as they were.

What remains to say of the fight? It staggled swiftly on the middle of the horse shoe on the west, grew big and angry on the heel at the southwest, lasted there till 6 o'clock in the evening, when the fighting Sixth corps went joyously by as a reinforcement through the wood, bright with coffee pots on the fire.

I leave details to my excellent friend and associate Mr. HUNT. My pen is heavy. Oh, you dead, who at Gettysburgh have baptized with your blood the second birth of Freedom in America, how you are to be envied! I rise from a grave where not clay I have passionately kissed, and I look up and see Christ spanning this battle-field with his feet and reaching fraternal and lovingly up to heaven. His right hand opens the gates of Paradise—with his left he beckons to these mutilated, bloody, swollen forms to ascend.

INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE.

Capt. CUSHING, Company A, Fourth Regular artillery, was killed, and his battery suffered severely. The gallantry of this officer is beyond praise. Severely wounded early in the afternoon, he refused to leave his post beside his guns, but continued to pour grape and canister into the advancing columns of the rebels until they had reached the very muzzles of his pieces, and sure of their capture, were attempting to turn them upon our forces, when they were driven off by our infantry. At this moment Capt. CUSHING received his death wound, and fell lifeless to the earth. Heaps of corpses and wounded in front of his battery this morning, told a terrible tale of the effectiveness of its fire.

None of the company were taken prisoners by the rebels. After the battle but one gun of this battery remained uninjured—the rest having been dismounted or destroyed by the terrible fire of the enemy, which for the time was concentrated upon the batteries on this part of the field. In front of this position fell dead the rebel Gen. DICK GARNETT, who was courageously leading his men in this charge upon our batteries on Crow Hill. The rebel Gen. ARMISTEAD was also wounded here while advancing at the head of his brigade.

About fifty yards in front of our batteries was a stone wall, running from our centre in a southwesterly direction, behind which laid several of our regiments, picking off the enemy as they advanced up the slope of the hill. Notwithstanding the terrible fire poured into their ranks from our guns, so impetuous was the charge of the rebels that they drove our men from their position, and were advancing upon our batteries, several of which they captured, but the capture was only temporary. Gen. GIBBON's division, composed of Gens. WEBB's, HARROLD's and HALL's brigades, at the point of the bayonet, drove them back over the stone wall into the plain below.

Gen. GIBBON's division captured fourteen stand of colors and a large number of prisoners. Twenty-eight stands of colors in all were captured by the Second corps.

Gen. ARMISTEAD, when taken prisoner, asked immediately for Gen. MEADE, who was his classmate at West Point.

Col. WARD, of the Fifteenth Massachusetts, was killed.

Corp. HAYDEN, of the First Minnesota, was captured—escaped, seized a musket and seized a rare opportunity, and actually made ten rebels surrender. While marching them to Gen. GIBBON's quarters, a rebel behind a tree on the way drew a bead on him with his ride. HAYDEN saw him in time to bring his piece to a level, and cry out, "Surrender." The fellow actually threw down his gun and joined the cavalcade, and HAYDEN came in with eleven captives.

Wounded prisoners taken in Gettysburgh this morning report that Gen. BRADLEY L. JOHNSON, of Maryland, was killed in Thursday's attack on our right. He was struck by a shell while charging our lines at the head of his division. Gen. HOOD is also reported to have had his let shot off, and from the effects of which he has since died.

Rebel officers with whom I have conversed frankly admit that the result of the last two days has been most disastrous to their cause, which depended, they say, upon the success of Lee's attempt to transfer the seat of war from Virginia to the Northern Border States. A wounded rebel Colonel told me that, in the first and second days' fight, the rebel losses were between ten and eleven thousand. Yesterday they were greater still. In one part of the field, in a space not more than twenty feet in circumference, in front of Gen. GIBBON's division, I counted seven dead rebels, three of whom were piled on top of each other. And close by in a spot not more than fifteen feet square lay fifteen "graybacks," stretched in death. These were the adventurous spirits, who in the face of the horrible stream of canister, shell and musketry, scaled the fence wall in their attempt upon our batteries. Very large numbers of wounded were also strewn around, not to mention more who had crawled away or been taken away. The field in front of the stonewall was literally covered with dead and wounded, a large proportion of whom were rebels. Where our musketry and artillery took effect they lay in swaths, as if mown down by a scythe. This field presented a horrible sight—such as has never yet been witnessed during the war. Not less than one thousand dead and wounded laid in a space of less than four acres in extent, and that, too, after numbers had crawled away to places of shelter.

The enemy's infantry, saving a small force of sharpshooters, was wholly out of sight at daylight on Saturday morning. There was talk on Friday night, after the battle, of organizing a column of pursuit.

Before the fighting was over—before sunset, considerably—the Signal Officers reported that an immense train of army wagons was going out of Gettysburgh northwest, on the road to Cashtown. Oh! that they could have run against the stonewall of the Harrisburgh army.

PARTIAL LIST OF KILLED AND WOUNDED.

Lieut. Layton L. Card, commanding Co. E, 108th New York, was killed instantly by a shell. His body presented a ghastly sight. He was struck in the middle of the breast by a missile which exploded and tore him literally in two. Half of his face was also torn away by a fragment of shell.

Charles P. Lesiear, Co. E, 108th N. Y.—killed.
J. Wickham, Co. E, 108th N. Y.—wounded.
Sergeant A. B. Hadley, &c. &c.—wounded.
Sergt. H. G. Bryant, Co. E, 108th N. Y.—wounded.
J. D. Austick, Co. E, 108th New-York—wounded.

Cowan's New-York Battery—Killed.

Privates James Grey, Otis C. Billings, Jacob T. Mallroy, Edmund Pole.

THE BIRTHDAY OF THE REPUBLIC.

Celebration of its Eighty-Seventh Anniversary in New-York and Vicinity.

Democratic Gathering at the Academy of Music.

Addresses by Gov. Horatio Seymour, of New-York; Ex-Gov. T. H. Seymour, of Connecticut; Geo. H. Pendleton, of Ohio, and Rich'd O'Gorman, Esq.

The Tammany Society Celebration.

Military Parade—Fireworks—Accidents, Incidents, &c.

The celebration of the "glorious Fourth" in this City and vicinity, on Saturday, was characterised by all the heartiness, hopefulness and spirit of the good old times. The news from the Union army of the preceding day had been of a cheering character, yet not sufficiently definite and decisive to allay the anxieties of the people; but the timely arrival, early in the forenoon of the Fourth, of the dispatches of Gen. MEADE, accompanied by the congratulatory proclamation of the President, at once relieved the public mind, and everybody proceeded to celebrate the day with zeal, thankfulness and joy. The public celebrations were not on so extensive a scale as in many former years, but the private exhibitions of fireworks and other patriotic demonstrations, on the part of the citizens generally, were seldom if ever surpassed. The weather was fine, with a cool breeze and a pleasant intermingling of sun and shade; there were few accidents, and none of a serious nature; and altogether the eighty-seventh anniversary of our National independence met with a reception worthy of the past, and disappeared under circumstances calculated to inspire hope for the future.

Below will be found as extended reports as the crowded state of our columns will permit, of the public demonstrations in the Metropolis and adjoining towns.

Gubernatorial Ovation at the Academy of Music.

Celebration of the National Anniversary by the Democracy.

Speeches of Gov. Seymour, of New-York; Ex-Gov. Seymour, of Connecticut; Hon. Geo. H. Pendleton, of Ohio, and Richard O'Gorman, Esq.

The Eighty-seventh Anniversary of our National independence, was made the occasion of a great demonstration by the Democracy of this City. The meeting, held at the Academy of Music, was gotten up under the auspices of the New-York Democratic Union Association, and the announcement that Gov. SEYMOUR, of this State, Ex-Gov. Seymour, of Connecticut, and Gov. Parker, of New-Jersey, had accepted invitations to be present and address the meeting, drew together a very large audience, in which the ladies were well represented. At two o'clock, the hour appointed for the exercises to commence, but few seats remained unoccupied, and these were soon filled. The musical part of the programme was well executed, though it was observable that selections of a national and patriotic character were not given the greatest prominence. Among the distinguished persons upon the platform, in addition to the speakers for the occasion, were Ex-Gov. BARTLEY, of Ohio, Hon. W. H. ASPINWALL, Secretary of State of Ohio, GIDEON J. TUCKER, Prof. MORSE, Prof. CYRUS MASON, Hon. S. J. TILDEN, Rev. Dr. CUMMINGS and HENRY GRINNELL. As the speakers came to the front of the platform, they were received with enthusiastic applause, and "three times three" were given for Gov. SEYMOUR. PHILIP W. ENOS was selected as the presiding officer. C. GODFRAY GUNTHER read the Declaration of Independence, and Hon. ELY P. NORTON read the guarantees of the Constitution. During these readings, all those passages which could be construed into parallels between the tyrannical usurpations of the King of England and the so-called usurpations and tyrannies of President Lincoln, were loudly applauded. Gov. SEYMOUR, on arising, was received with great applause. He spoke as follows:

SPEECH OF GOV. SEYMOUR.

FELLOW CITIZENS: When I accepted the invitation to speak, with others, at this meeting, we were promised the downfall of Vicksburgh, the opening of the Mississippi, the probable capture of the Confederate capital, and the exhaustion of the rebellion. By common consent, all parties had fixed upon this day when the results of the campaign should be known, to mark out that line of policy which they felt that our country should pursue. But, in the moment of expected victory, there came the midnight cry for help from Pennsylvania to save its despoiled fields from the invading foe; and almost within sight of this great commercial metropolis, the ashes of your merchants were burned to the water's edge. Since that time to this, I have occupied every hour of my time to the point of physical exhaustion, to rally our troops to the rescue of an adjoining sister State [tremendous applause;] to organize the militia of our own State for our defence, and to place it in that condition of dignity and power which a great State should ever hold that truly respects its own rights. [Great applause.] I have concerned myself with those measures that I thought were calculated to protect the commerce of this great City. I stand before you, then, upon this occasion, not as one animated by expected victories, but feeling, as all feel who are now within the sound of my voice, the dread uncertainty of the conflicts which rage around us, not alone in Pennsylvania, but along the long course of the Mississippi—contests that are carrying down to bloody graves so many of our fellow-countrymen, so many of our friends—that are spreading renewed mourning throughout this great broad land of ours. Under circumstances like these, I shall allow to go unsaid many topics upon which I meant to speak on this occasion. They might seem to jar with the solemnity of the occasion. They might not be in keeping with the feelings which now press on each breast of ours.

But there is one subject to which even now I feel it my duty to call your attention. There is one appeal that I want now to make to this whole community, irrespective of party, and I pray that you will hear that appeal. A few years ago, we stood before this community to warn them of the danger of sectional strife; but our fears were laughed at. At a later day, when the clouds of war overhung our country, we implored those in authority to compromise that difficulty, for we had been told by a great orator and statesman, BURKE, there never yet was a revolution that might not have been stayed by a compromise made in a timely and graceful manner. [Great applause.] Our prayers were unheeded. Again, when the contest was opened, we stopped to invoke those who had the conduct of affairs not to underrate the power of the adversary—not to underrate the courage and resources, and endurance of our own sister States. All this warning was treated as sympathy with treason. You have the results of these unheeded warnings and unheeded prayers; they have stained our soil with blood; they have carried mourning into thousands of homes; and to-day they have brought our country to the very brink of destruction. Once more I come before you, to offer again the earnest prayer, and ask you to listen to a warning. Our country is not only at this time torn by one of the bloodiest wars that has ever ravaged the face of the earth, or of which history gives us an account, but if we turn our faces to our own loved States, how is it there? Do you not find the community divided into political parties, strongly arrayed against each other, and using with regard to each other terms of reproach and defiance? Is it not said by those who support more particularly the Administration that we who differ, honestly, patriotically, sincerely, from them with regard to the line of duty, that we are void of treasonable purposes, and traitors to our country? [Applause.] But, on the other hand, is it not true that those of our organization look upon this Administration as hostile to our rights and liberties? [A voice—"Yes," and applause.] Look upon our opponents as men who would do us wrong in regard to our most sacred franchises? I need not call your attention to the tone of the Press, or to the tone of public feeling, to show you how, at this moment, parties are thus exasperated, and stand in almost defiant attitudes to each other. A few years ago, we were told that sectional strife, waged in times like these; would do no harm to our country; but you have seen the sad and bloody results. Let us be admonished now in time, and take care that this irritation, this fierce feeling which is growing up in our midst, shall not [illegible] shall carry the evils [illegible] about our own hearths. Now, [illegible] are agreed, and [illegible] North, we can [illegible] have a united [illegible] be beneficent peace. But how [illegible] mony? How shall that unity of all parties be obtained? I wish to say a few words to you upon this point, which, I firmly believe, is one of the most important considerations to which I could call your attention. Is harmony to be coerced? I appeal to you, my Republican friends, that when you say to us that the nation's life and domestic peace hang upon harmony and concord here, if you yourselves, in your serious moments, believe that this is to be produced by seizing our persons, by infringing upon our rights, by insulting our homes, and by depriving us of those cherished privileges for which our fathers fought, and to which we have always sworn allegiance? [Great applause.] I do appeal to you, my Republican friends, and beg that you will receive this appeal in the earnest and in the patriotic spirit which prompts me to make it. I appeal to you if you are not doing yourselves and your country a great wrong when you declare that harmony and unity of parties are essential to save the nation's life, essential to the highest interests of our land, and yet that you thus stigmatize men, as true and honest as yourselves and those whom first experience has proved to have been wiser, too, as men who do not love their country, and who are untrue to its institutions. How, then, are we to get this indispensable harmony—this needed unity? It is not to be obtained by trampling upon rights; it is not to be obtained by threats; it is not to be obtained by coercion; it is not to be obtained by attempting to close our lips when we would utter the honest purposes of our hearts, and the firm convictions of our judgment. [Applause.] But, my Republican friends, there is a mode by which it can be reached, and there is a mode by which the nation's life can be saved; there is a mode by which, in the end, we will restore the Union of our fathers, and bring back those glorious privileges which are so wantonly thrown away. [Applause.] We come to you in no spirit of arrogance. We do not come to you asking you to make any concessions to our wisdom. We simply come to you this day to ask you to accept the wisdom and patriotism of our common fathers. [Applause.] We do not ask you to make any concessions of advantages to us; on the contrary, we only say to you, who hold in your hands, and in your control, almost all the political power of the country, to exercise it, but to exercise it according to our chartered rights. [Great applause.] We only ask that you shall give to us that which you claim for yourselves, and that which every freeman, and every man who respects himself will have for himself, freedom of speech, the right to exercise all the franchises conferred by the Constitution upon us. [Great applause.] Can you safely deny us these things? Are you not trampling upon us, and upon our rights, if you refuse to listen to an appeal? By this revolution which you are thus creating when you say that our persons may be rightfully seized, our property confiscated, our homes entered, are you not exposing yourselves, your own interests to as great a calamity as that with which you threaten us? Remember, this, that the bloody, and treasonable, and revolutionary doctrine of public necessity can be proclaimed by a mob as well as by a Government. [Applause.] Remember all the teachings of history; and we implore you, with regard to your own interests, to stop and inquire if you are not doing yourselves, and your own families, and all that you hold dear to you, an infinite wrong when you sustain propositions that tear away from them, as well as from us all the barriers and protections which the Constitution of your country has thrown around public liberty. [Great applause.] Can you tell when ambition, love of plunder, or thirst for power will induce bad and dangerous men to proclaim this very principle of military necessity, public necessity, as a reason why they should trample beneath their feet all the laws of our land and the institutions of our country. I ask you again to think if measures like these give power, dignity, or strength to our Government? I ask you, on the other hand, if those Governments have not lived out their longest periods, who, in times of public danger, instead of shrinking back from the principles of liberty and the barriers of order, have raised aloft these great principles, and battled under them, and thus given strength to the hearts of the people, and gained the respect of the world. [Applause.] I ask you if it is not an evidence of weakness, defect and discomfiture, when, in the presence of armed rebellion, the Administration is compelled to hold that the very charter by which it holds its power has ceased to have a virtue that can protect a citizen in his rights. Suppose we accept this doctrine, what will be the effects to you? What will be the consequence to this Government? To-day, that great conservative party, the great masses of conservative men who still battle for time-honored principles—for cherished principles of government, amid denunciation, and contumely, and abuse, are the only things that stand between this Government and its own destruction. If we accept to-morrow this teaching—if we to-morrow should acquiesce in the doctrine that in times of war Constitutions are suspended, and laws have lost their force, then we should accept a doctrine that the very right by which this Government administers power, has lost its virtue, and would be brought down to the level of Rebellion itself, living and existing only by virtue of material power. Would not the vital blow be struck at liberty? If we should accept this doctrine, what would be the consequence? When men accept despotism, they may have a choice as to who the despot shall be. [Applause.] The struggle then will not be, shall we have Constitutional liberty. But having accepted the doctrine that the Constitution has lost its force, every instinct of personal ambition, every instinct of personal security, would lead men to put themselves under the protection of that power which they suppose most competent to protect their persons. And then this Administration would find that, in putting military rulers over us they had made military masters for themselves; for this all history teaches us; that that General who will betray the liberties of the people for the purpose of gaining the favor of power, will, when opportunity occurs, seize power himself. [Applause.] I don't know that they'll appeal to you, who may be politically opposed to us. Don't do yourselves a wrong—don't do your own Administration the wrong to push us from that position which we are trying to hold. Do not use abuse and contumely against our persons, and threats against our property, because we stand up to say that you, and we, and all shall have our rights; because we stand up to say your homes shall be sacred; because we stand up to say the family circle shall not be intruded upon, and, in English parlances, every man's home shall be his castle, within which he shall be safe from intrusion. [Applause.] Way, what is the glory of a people and the glory of a nation? It is not the magnitude of its power; it is not the extent of its dominions. It is the fact that the humblest home is safe under its protection. The proudest boast ever uttered by Britain's proudest statesman was this—not of martial achievements—not of the triumphs upon the field—not upon the wonderful dominion upon which the sun never sets—no, it was this: that the British monarch could never enter unbidden the humblest home in the land, although its broken ceilings might give but scanty shelter to its humble inmates. [Great applause.] For what are governments constituted but for this—not for dominion; not for grandeur; but in order that these great ends might be reached; that every man should enjoy the rights of person, the security of home, and freedom of conscience, and the enjoyment of his property, subject to the least possible burden from the law and from the State. These are the great objects of governments; and any government, and any system that comes short of this, fails of its object; and any declaration that assails or endangers these great objects is treason against human rights. [Applause.] But, it is said there is a law of necessity that in times like these suspends our Constitution—that war is unfavorable to liberty. It is not true: liberty was born in war; it does not die in war. [Great applause.] Liberty was wrought out on the battle-field. That wonderful people who founded this great State—the Hollanders, who for eighty years battled against the martial laws and martial powers of Spain—made it a vivifying principle which sustained them during that long contest, and which enabled them to render their history glorious in the annals of mankind. Personal rights and personal liberties suspended during our own Revolutionary contest! You heard the words of that Declaration of Independence, which said that men had a right to trial by jury; that the military authority should never be exalted above the civil jurisdiction; that men should not be transported abroad for trial, [tremendous applause;] that they should have all the rights and privileges known to English jurisprudence and English law; and yet to-day we are told that the men who put forth that Declaration of Rights and of Independence, amid the roar of battle, when our nation was struggling into existence, in all its weakness, who declared—and they made their declaration good by their conduct through that contest, that these rights were to be held sacred in war; yet to-day we are told that these men who uttered this declaration in war, made a Constitution that died and shrinks away in war—that men trained in the trials of revolution had formed the Government under which we live, that was not equal to the very highest purposes for which governments are constituted. I tell you it is a libel upon our fathers. [Great applause.] So far from it being true that those who formed this Constitution contemplated that these powers should be suspended, you find to all these provisions particular care for all the dangers and the exigencies of war; you find numerous provisions that are meant to guard against the very dangers that now menace us. Your attention has been called to the fact by the gentleman who preceded me. Was it that they so carefully guarded all your rights amid public disorder, if they meant that the mere existence of disorder should suspend the barriers of public order and private rights? This doctrine of the suspension of the Constitution—this doctrine of the suspension of the laws, is unconstitutional, is unbound—it is treasonable! [Tremendous applause, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs. A voice: "Those are just the words."] I am one of those who are full of hope for the future. Not that I underrate the dangers which threaten us—not that I do not deplore as much as living man can the terrible ravages of the war, that now does war rage in our land? It was because the people of this generation have lost the virtues, and patriotism, and wisdom of their fathers, who framed it. It was because we had become indifferent to those great truths which we are now looking up, and which we have now laid before us, as if they were curiosities in legal discussions; instead of being great truths that should be impressed upon the heart and mind of every American. I tell you why I am full of hope, that not only will our liberties be maintained, our Union restored, and order once again prevail over this great land of ours. It is this: Examine yourselves, and I ask you how many men there are [illegible] the sound of [illegible] this [illegible] twenty years ago, what our Constitution [illegible] this country was? I do not say that I did not understand it intelligently. I had reason to say that it was not important upon your statute-book. I do not mean to say that it had not formed your political system, but it was not until we were made to feel, as our fathers felt, the value of this declaration that they had put forth, that any of us could ever see the value and significance of the Constitution of our country and the Declaration of Independence. [Applause.] We have accepted it as a mere matter and intellectuality; but why was it, when these familiar words sounded upon your ears on this occasion, as you have heard them often before on the anniversary of our country's liberty, that they stirred your very hearts within you, and made your blood tingle in your veins. My friends we have not now a mere intellectual knowledge of the Constitution—we do not give it now a mere mental support—we have now, upon that subject, a vital living piety that makes us better men and better patriots too; and wherever you go, all over this land, you find these sentiments now dated in the minds of more than a majority of the American people. They are now formed in their faith based in their purpose—a party of the people, fanatics—fanatics, for the great principles of liberty, and fanatical in their determination to see that these rights and liberties are established. [Great applause.] We have seen in our land two small parties, each an inconsiderable minority in the section of country where it existed, but men of purpose—men of zeal—men of fanaticism,—we have seen them wage a war upon the Constitution of your country, with a persistence and power that has, at last, shaken it to its very foundation, and brought us to-day to the very brink of national ruin. We have seen what zeal and purpose could do when it was opposed only by a dull mental acquiescence in great truths. What may we not then hope for to-day when the great majority of the American people have a fervent, living and vital faith in those principles which you have heard and read, and who propose to maintain them at every cost and at every hazard. [Great applause.] Do you wish for peace? Do you wish for victory? Do you wish for the restoration of our National privileges? Here lies the pathway, and let the American people once learn to value aright their privileges and understand the principles and value of liberty as our fathers did, and the battle is fought and won. Without these, my friends, war can bring you no success—peace can give you no quiet until the American people are thus educated, and elevated—and thus educated and elevated I believe they are rapidly becoming—until that takes place, war or peace are the mere incidents of the great underlying causes of convulsions which have involved our land and shaken our institution to the very centre. Remember this, that the great underlying cause of this war, I care not what particular application you may give to it—your particular views may lead you to attribute it to one special cause or another special cause—but there is one great underlying general cause which must be removed before it can be restored, and that cause is indifference to our rights, indifference to our liberties, and want of proper intelligence with regard to our own country, and want of an elevated wisdom that could understand the duties of American citizenship. When you have gained this, peace will be restored; when you have gained this, all the world can see that we have gone back to the wisdom of our fathers, and that we are again sustaining institutions that invited the whole world to their love and protection—institutions that made us, but three short years ago, the most glorious nation on the face of the earth. When we have again, I say, restored that virtue and that intelligence, our country will again be restored to its former greatness and to its former glory. [Great applause.] But, my friends, anything short of this will disappoint your hopes. No victory can restore greatness, and glory, and power, to a people who are unworthy of liberty. No peace will bring back prosperity to a land which cannot understand the great principles upon which Governments should be protected, and the great objects for which Governments are instituted. [Applause.] But, my friends, I must close—for there are others to speak after me whom you will wish to hear. [Voices, "Go on." "Let us now upon this sad, this solemn, as well as this glorious occasion, rededicate ourselves to the service of our country. In years and for great patriotism, putting aside passions and prejudices as far as may be, may we prepare ourselves to assume and to maintain the great principles stated in the Declaration of Independence, and secured to us by the provisions of the Constitution of the United States. Let us resolve from this time to do our duty and to demand our rights. [Applause.] In all that becomes us, and so far as they are acting within the sphere of their constitutional powers, let us be obedient to rulers. Let us submit, cheerfully, patiently and willingly to those commands which they have a right to issue, whether we like them or not. Let us do our duty in a way that will give us a claim to our rights; and when we have done our duty, let us claim our rights in all their fullness, in all their completeness, in all their perfection. He who does not do his duty, without regard to the misconduct of others, is untrue to his country. He who does not claim his rights in a untrue to liberty and to humanity. [Applause.] From this time let us resolve that we will uphold all the just powers of the Government, all the rights of the States, the rights of the Press, and, above all, as our surest shield, the independence and the purity of the judiciary. [Applause.] We stand to-day, my friends, amid new-made graves. We stand to-day in a land filled with mourning, and on a soil saturated with the blood of the fiercest conflict of which history gives us a record. We can, from all these disasters and all these calamities, evoke a blessing if we will do—what? Let them tell us the liberties and laws are suspended—be untrue to them? Shrink back from the assertion of right? Will that restore them? Or, shall we do as our fathers did under circumstances of like trial when, with unequal hand, they hauled against the powers of the Crown? Did they say that liberty was suspended? Did they say that men should not enjoy the rights of free speech? Did they say that men were to be torn from their homes by midnight intruders? [Applause.] If you would save your country, if you would save your liberties, begin aright—begin at the hearthstone, which is ever sacred to be the foundation of American institutions. Begin in your own family circle, declare of their rights that shall be held inviolate, and, having once proclaimed and established them for yourselves, take care that you do not invade your neighbor's rights. [Applause.] Claim for your own State that free Constitution and that government which we, better than all others, can exercise for ourselves, for we best know our own interests, and that which will do most to advance the happiness and prosperity of the country.

A VOICE—What will we do if our neighbors won't respect our rights?

GOV. SEYMOUR—I thank my friend yonder that my appeal has stirred his heart enough to ask the question. [Applause.] Now, the deductions we would make are very few and very simple. They are—respect our own rights, and respect the rights of others. [Applause.] They are to declare that great principles of Government are not holiday affairs, meant merely for a period of calm, but they are great truths, that can battle the storm as well. When we have determined upon this, as I said, then we can begin to hope that our country will be restored to its former greatness and to its former glory. Once more, then, my Republican friends, and once more, this whole community, I do invoke you to see whether we to-day, in our passions, giving way to our prejudices, are not endangering our own safety and our own homes. Once more I ask those who are politically opposed to me—if I am honored with the attendance of one such—that he will inquire if, in attempting to strike down our liberties, he is not striking a blow at his own. [Applause.] I ask of all such if they can hope to stop the great ball of revolution at that point which may suit their passions, their prejudices, or their convenience. But if they be not admonished, if they shall set the evil example and declare that laws and constitutions have lost their virtue and foundation, surely they have equally lost their virtue to defend them. [Long continued applause.]

At the conclusion of Gov. SEYMOUR's address, the Chairman said that he was requested by Mr. SEYMOUR, of Connecticut, to ask of them the withdrawal of his name from the programme, as his physical condition was such that he felt quite unable to address so vast an assemblage. As the audience did not assent to the proposition, he withdrew the request.

SPEECH OF HON. THOMAS H. SEYMOUR.

Mr. SEYMOUR remarked that, after what had been said, he felt as if he would rather retire to meditate than to open his lips before them. He came not so much to rejoice with them or congratulate with them on the present occasion, as to lament that the day was no longer what it once was, though they might rejoice and did rejoice that the past, at least, was secure. Our prosperity had been great and unexampled. What San Francisco had been to us, rising from its golden sands, America had been to the world—the marvel of the day. There had been created in us a sense of indestructibility. As an English writer had said, no young man expects to die. We had thought our institutions would remain forever, but the enemy had sown tares, and we were reaping the bitter fruits. When, in the better days of the Republic, their honored guest (Gov. SEYMOUR) and himself visited the grave of WASHINGTON, they did not dream that the warning voice of the great chief against sectional controversy would be lost upon his descendants. If the question of Slavery had been made the test in the Constitutional Convention, that body would undoubtedly have been broken up without forming any Constitution. [Applause.] New-England was the section of country where he had his attachments, but he could not help recalling the language of WARREN to the people of Massachusetts, that whatever else they had conquered, they had not conquered their prejudices. In meeting this crisis, those in revolt should have been told in the language of ANDREW JACKSON, in nullification times, "You shall have your rights, but you must obey the laws." Our Government was like a vast and complex piece of machinery; every principle of its construction must be complied with in order that the whole should not be destroyed. The Union was no nearer being cemented to-day than when the sad drama began. Those who gave the Administration unqualified support seemed to think it a Government that could wield despotic power without being called to an account. The Government never came into their hands to be used as they were using it. [Applause.] If he knew anything of the nature of the Government, it was by compromise, to bring about a new order of things—to rebuild the Temple of Freedom. [Applause.] We could not, he (the speaker) [illegible] compel [illegible] in the [illegible] of [illegible] [Great applause.] [illegible] might [illegible] country—right [illegible] rebellion, as [illegible] called—and [illegible] them to [illegible] necessary, to [illegible] to [illegible] poverty, [illegible] and, after all, not have the Union. Could our fathers have [illegible] to have and [illegible] feeling. [Renewed applause.] Some say, if we have not the power to [illegible] them to remain, we ought to have it; but it could not be had without totally changing the form of the Government itself. It implied the necessity of a vast standing army of not less than five hundred thousand men, who would have to be stationed in the principal cities, to crush out liberty of the Press and freedom of speech, and harass the people, and eat out their substance. [Applause.] When—borrowing the language of BURKE, in his speech on "Conciliation with America"—"When we shall have laid the first stone in the temple of peace, then we may hope for the restoration of that Union and the return of that prosperity of which the Union was the fountain and the bond." [Applause.] Truth might be a long while in revealing itself. But, as the sun which, in high northern latitudes, where darkness reigns supreme, comes at length to cheer and to warm, so would the day of reunion at length dawn upon us. Too few should not forever sway the many. The powers of hell might rule to-day, but Christ would rise to-morrow. [Applause.]

HON. GEORGE H. PENDLETON,

of Ohio, was next introduced. He said he would not think of addressing them were they not assembled with the Governor of the State to give exemplification to the doctrine of free speech, which should not be taken away. We had been told in these days that it was necessary to violate the Constitution in order to preserve the liberties of the people. In his own State, (Ohio,) a man whom they honored, a man whom they believed to be a true patriot, a man whom they knew to have devoted his energies to the preservation of the Constitution as it is, and the Union as it was—[applause]—a man whom they intended, if to have deserved success, would secure it, to place beside their (our) own honored Governor and worthy representative—[applause] they had seen him carried from his home at night, subjected to a military Court-martial, cast into exile after a mock trial; and he was there one of the ambassadors of the Democracy of Ohio, [applause,] accredited to ABRAHAM LINCOLN. [hisses.] with this message, "To fulfill the demand—the guarantees of the Constitution, and to return our citizen to his home." [Applause.] He had to say to them that if the doctrines promulgated in high places, stoutly asserted and defended by those whose hands were upon the hilt of the drawn sword, were to become the rule for this country, there would be no longer first to be settled the question of peace or war, but whether we had a free government, whether we were freemen. [Applause.]

THE CHAIRMAN thought it proper for him to state that all who were announced to be present on that occasion had been present, but the Governor of New-Jersey had received a telegram calling him to his State, on account of some necessity connected with the present state of our military affairs. They would therefore be deprived of the gratification of listening to him.

RICHARD O'GORMAN, ESQ.,

who was the last speaker, after treating the audience to a variety of incidents and illustrations, humorous and otherwise, which he probably thought to be peculiarly apropos, proceeded to discuss weightier matters. He thought that the first thing to be done was to arm the State of New-York. The course was safe—it could harm nobody. The Governor would do his duty. [Applause.] If he wanted money, let him get it by the free and voluntary subscriptions of the people. [Applause.] Let the State be armed, its soldiers drilled and disciplined as becomes one of the Sovereign States of the Union, and let them be commanded by the Commander-in-Chief—the Governor of the State. When this was done, we should not be so much in need of Provost-Marshals in New-York. [Laughter.] He had heard men talk of the necessity of a strong Government: there was one Government, strong and endurable, and that was a free Government. [Applause.] They were for the Union as long as it could be supported. They were for liberty, at all events, and in defence of liberty they pledged their lives, their property and their sacred honor. [Applause.]

After music by the band, the assembly dispersed.

Tammany Society Celebration.

AN ORATION—A POEM AND A BANQUET.

The "Tammany Society or Columbian Order," celebrated the day at the old Wigwam, in accordance with their invariable custom, and in their noted liberal and Democratic style. Soon after 1 P. M. the Sachems gathered together upon the platform—the hall being densely crowded—and were welcomed in a neat and patriotic speech by Grand Sachem E. F. PURDY, who assured them that as long as the Order of St. Tammany existed, they would continue to meet on each anniversary of our Independence, to "keep alive the patriotic flame of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity, and smoke the calumet of peace and good will with all the supporters and defenders of the Union and the Constitution of our country."

After a patriotic air by the band, Hon. T. C. FIELDS read the Declaration, and HENRY C. MONPOZ, pronounced an original poem. The poem contained some good hits, but was more political and partisan in its character than befitted the occasion.

The orator of the day was Hon. HENRY C. MURPHY, and his address was an eloquent, patriotic and well-timed production. He showed the absolute necessity that we should continue under our Government, and recognized in its fullest extent, not only the power but the duty of the officers at the head of the Government to suppress insurrection, execute the laws, and preserve the unity of the Republic. He did not hesitate to brand the instigators and leaders of this senseless rebellion as they deserve, and set forth in clear light the disastrous results that would flow to the entire country if they should be permitted to succeed. Want of room prevents a more extended notice of Mr. MURPHY's address, which ought to be published in pamphlet form, and read by every Democrat who may have become ensnared with doctrines recently promulgated by the leader of the Mozart faction.

At the close of the oration the banquet-room was thrown open, and the Sachems and warriors partook freely of the waters of the Great Spring and the savory viands that had been prepared as concomitants to the draughts. While this was being done, Gov. SEYMOUR entered the room, and was immediately called upon for a speech. After some hesitation he complied, and proceeded to say that he had just come from the Academy of Music, where he had spoken at length. He must, therefore, necessarily be brief in his present remarks. [Cries of "Go on," "Don't be short," and "Bully for you."] It filled his heart with pride to meet with such a reception from a Society which had nearly, if not quite, outlived its country. [Applause.] He did not believe that personal liberty was suspended, because the rebellion had taken place. Personal rights must not be trampled upon, even if a war does exist within our borders. [Cheers.] He was much indebted to Tammany Hall for many favors. He was proud to be among the Sachems of the old wigwam, and, in conclusion, again and again returned his thanks for the very cordial reception which he had met at their hands.

The Governor soon after left the hall, amid the parting cheers of those assembled.

A large number of toasts followed, and were responded to by T. C. FIELDS, C. SWACKHAMER, Gen. BURNETT, Judge PIERREPONT, H. S. CLINTON, H. B. PERINE, and others. Capt. RUNDERS made a speech upon his own hook, the burden of which was the outrage of the Vallandigham arrest, and foul abuse of President LINCOLN, and other Government officials. It was poorly received. Among the prominent Sachems and others who were in attendance upon the exercises in the hall, were Hon. J. STRIKER, of Oneida, Judge DALY, James BROOKS, A. OAKEY HALL, Edwards PIERREPONT, Judge HILTON, Judge SUTHERLAND, Jno. CLANCY, S. B. GARVIN, Jas. B. NICHOLSON, &c.

Parade of the Military.

The military display was not so great yesterday as in former years, owing to the fact of nearly all our brave citizen soldiers being absent in Pennsylvania and Maryland driving the invaders from our soil. Not a single infantry regiment is left in the City, so the parade was made by cavalry alone. At 9 o'clock A. M., line was formed on Fourteenth-street, the right resting on Fifth-avenue. Brig.-Gen. SPICER being unwell, Lieut.-Col. MINTURN assumed command. The following is a list of the troops and the order in which they marched:

Cavalry escort under command of Capt. OTTO.

Montgomery troops under command of Capt. LEARY.

First regiment cavalry.

Third regiment hussars, commanded by Col. BARTHS.

The rear was brought up by a company of Cadets, from New-Hamburgh, N. Y., who attracted much attention by their admirable marching. Arriving at the Park, the troops passed in review before Acting Mayor WALSH, President of the Board of Aldermen, and the members of the Common Council.

The Pyrotechnic Display.

The display of fireworks at the various parks in the city was truly magnificent, almost eclipsing all previous efforts of by-gone years. At the City Hall Park they were very splendid, and amply repaid the tens of thousands of people who had left their homes to witness them. The crowning piece was a representation of the engagement between the Monitor and Merrimac, which gave proof of extraordinary skill in the pyrotechnic art, and elicited loud applause; but the greatest amount of enthusiasm was manifested when a piece representing the Temple of Liberty, with WASHINGTON in the centre, was set off.

The TIMES Office was brilliantly illuminated during the evening, and attracted scarcely less attention and admiration than the pyrotechnic display in the Park.

The Veterans of 1812.

The grim veterans of 1812 (Col. RAYMOND,) assembled at the Mercer House—their headquarters—at 9 o'clock, and spent some hours in free and easy converse upon the absorbing topics of the day. At noon they formed in line and paraded on Broadway, coming down town to the principal newspaper offices to pay their respects in a style. The old soldiers, in their simple uniforms of blue cloth, tall hat and crimson feather, attracted much attention as they marched through the crowded streets. Every one felt that a martial spirit still imbued them, and that, if need be, they were yet capable of doing the State some service. After refreshing themselves at CROONS the Veterans, highly pleased, returned to the Mercer House and were dismissed.

Loyal League Celebration.

The Loyal League of the Twenty-second Ward had a celebration in the Hall corner of Broadway and Forty-seventh-street, opened by prayer by the Rev. Mr. HASTINGS, after which the Declaration was read by G. C. DIXON, Esq., and an oration was delivered by Prof. E MARSH, of the New-York University. The President of the League, H. T. HUNTER, Esq., occupied the chair, and there was a good attendance of ladies and gentlemen.

The Celebration at the Institutions.

It has been well understood that President DRAPER, in charge of the Public Institutions connected with the City, would not allow the day to the orphans, the lunatics, the paupers, and the deaf, the dumb and blind to pass unnoticed. A boat was in readiness at 9 o'clock to proceed from Bellevue Station, and when, Mr. DRAPER arrived with his friends, they received a salute of honor.

The steamer went direct to Randall's Island, where the party met the orphan children, male and female, under the charge of Mr. W. H. STEPHENS. They all assembled in the large schoolroom, and presented a picture of health and cleanliness, which reflected much credit on their attendants.

The exercises of speeches made by the boys, singing by the females, dialogues, &c., having been gone through, President DRAPER addressed them as follows:

MY DEAR CHILDREN: It is about fourteen years ago since I came to this institution, and at that time I found the girls and lads all healthy and vigorous, well dressed and well cared for. Since that I have endeavored to see you every Fourth of July specially, and to see you every week. You are young Americans, and it appears to me that you know you are. That glorious flag which now floats so proudly in your school-room, you revere and respect the same as those did in the days of yore. It is the same flag that in 1776 displayed the Stars and Stripes, supporting the manhood of that day, that they might look upon it, and, it needs be, die for it. So far as lies in my power, I shall endeavor to have you well instructed here, and to cherish in your hearts respect for that glorious emblem, which I see that you appreciate so highly. I am convinced that when you arrive at riper years, if called upon, you will go forth to support the honor, the dignity and the perpetuity of that flag, and you will die to defend it. This you will do with a patriotic glow and an ardor of those who handed down to us the Union and the Constitution. May God guide and watch you, that as you grow in wisdom, to stand by the good old flag, and that when you come to leave Randall's Island, you may feel that you there received an education competent to qualify you to grapple with all the cares of life. You have, by your good teachers, been taught your duty here, such as may fit you to pass through all the changing scenes of this world. You have no fathers, no mothers, but in me, and in this institution you have both father and mother. This institution will stand, I hope, as long as the world lasts, as an asylum and protection to the orphans. And it will stand also to be the receptacle of the fatherless children of those who have died in the defence of a free and united Republic.

At the conclusion of the President's speech, three hearty cheers were given by the children present.

Mr. SEXTENNE, the Warden, invited the President and his friends to partake of his hospitalities, to which ample justice was done.

Visit to Fort Schuyler, &c.

President DRAPER having minutely inspected the whole apparati connected with the building, invited the gentlemen who accompanied him to a trip down to Fort Schuyler, among whom were the members of the Press, and Messrs. HENRY EBBEN, GEORGE H. SWORDS, WM. DUSENBURY and W. KELLOG.

Accidents and Incidents.

About the usual number of accidents and incidents occurred during the day and evening, but with some ten or twelve exceptions they were not of a fatal character. At a late hour on Friday evening a girl named CATHARINE DONOVAN, aged twelve years, residing at No. 46 Mulberry-street, while on the sidewalk, was shot by some unknown person with a pistol, the ball taking effect in her left hand. She was taken to the New-York Hospital.....A boy named WM. CUNNINGHAM, 10 years old, residing at No. 123 Roosevelt-street, was shot by another boy in the back. He was taken to the New-York Hospital considerably injured. Young CUNNINGHAM refused to give the name of the boy who committed the offence.....ABOON FINGLESTON, a Polish boy, 7 years old, residing at No. 64 Baxter-street, received a severe wound on the nose by the premature discharge of a pistol. He was taken to the Hospital.....THOS. LOVELEY was killed by the premature discharge of a cannon in Third-avenue, between Eighty-first and Eighty-second streets.....JOHN HUGHES, aged 9 years, fell out of the fifth story window of the house No. 109 Thompson-street, and was instantly killed.....A boy named WILLARD WARING fell from a third story window to the sidewalk, at the corner of Twenty-second-street and Eleventh-avenue, and died in half an hour afterward.....WM. KENNEDY, 8 years of age, residing at No. 58 Baxter-street, was shot in the head by the premature discharge of a pistol in the hands of another boy named THOMAS MCGRATH. The pistol was loaded with ball cartridge; the injured lad was taken to the Hospital where he died immediately. Coroner COLLIN held an inquest upon the body, and the jury rendered a verdict, in which they censured Mr. RAYMOND, of Catharine-street, for selling ball-cartridges to a small boy.....MARY A. HARNEY, of No. 218 East Thirteenth-street, was seriously shot in the neck by a pistol in the hands of some person unknown. She was taken to Bellevue Hospital.....GEORGE DAVIS, residing at No. 161 West-twenty-seventh-street, fell from the second-story window of his residence, and was so much injured that he died soon after. Coroner RANKIN held an inquest upon the body.....JOHN E. BAKER, of No. 303 Monroe-street, fell into the dock at the foot of Grand-street, East River, while intoxicated, and was drowned.....A boy named JOHN GUNNEL, residing at No. 95 Ridge-street, aged 12 years, fell through a hatchway at No. 53 Dey-street, and was so much injured that he cannot recover. He was conveyed to the hospital.....JOHN KANE, 13 years old, residing at No. 143 West Forty-first-street, had his hand torn off, and was otherwise severely injured by the bursting of a loaded pistol. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.....JOHN DENNISON had his right hand blown off and his head greatly injured by the explosion of a cannon, in Forty-ninth-street, near Third-avenue.....MARY ANN HENRY, while sitting in a basement window of No. 218 East Thirtieth-street, was shot in the neck with a pistol loaded with ball-cartridge. She was taken to Bellevue.....JOHN MALOY had his right hand shot off by the explosion of a pistol, at the corner of the Bowery and Fifth-street.....JOHN LOUGENSTEIN, aged 11 years, residing at No. 140 East Thirty-eight-street, was dangerously injured in the head and hands by the explosion of a pist protestator address to the people, and a benediction by Rev. I. CHERIE, the Long Island Historical Society decla...d the day celebrated and adjourned.

The Fourth in Hudson County, N. J.

The Fourth was celebrated in Hudson County in an unusually quiet way, and no event occurred to mar the festivities of the day. In Jersey City, there was a celebration gotten up by the the Municipal authorities, consisting of National salutes at sunrise, noon and sundown.

At mid-day public exercises were held in the Congregational Tabernacle, in York-street, which were opened by prayer by Rev. Mr. PARMLEE. A solo and chorus was sung by Mr. D. S. GREGORY, Jr., and the Declaration of Independence was read by Mr. A. S. HATCH. The oration was delivered by Rev. Dr. SAMUEL BELL, recently of California, whose remarks were eminently patriotic and eloquent. In the evening, there was a fine display of fireworks at Van Vorst-square.

The following picnics visited the suburbs during the day:

St. Peter's, (Rev. Father KELLY,) Jersey City, at Merseles' Grove, which was visited by upward of 10,000 people.

St. Mary's, Catholic, West Hoboken, at Syms' Woods.

German picnic at Centre Hill, for the benefit of the widows of the Twenty-first New-Jersey Volunteers.

St. Paul's Church, Greenville, at Bergen Point.

Picnic at Communipaw, for the benefit of the Dutch Reformed Church.

There was no celebration at Hoboken or Hudson City.

There were seven arrests in Jersey City since Friday night.

The Fourth of July in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Thursday, July 4.

The Assemblage on the President's grounds today, attending the celebration ceremonies, was composed in part of the military, corporate authorities, and Masonic and Odd Fellows fraternities. The Hon. HIRAM WALBRIDGE delivered the oration, he having been selected, as the Committee of Arrangements say in their invitation, on account of his being a citizen of the great State of New-York, holding the largest interest in the National Union, and he should therefore speak in behalf of that Union here at the Capital at this most critical period of our country's history. National salutes were fired by order of the Government, and generally the day was celebrated with much enthusiasm, and at niget there were in all directions profuse displays of fireworks. Secession sympathizers early in the day endeavored to cast a gloom over the community by extravagant falsehoods concerning disasters to our army, but the light of truth soon diffused general joy and dissipated their dishonest purposes.

The Fourth in Philadelphia.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 5.

The Fourth passed here without any political demonstrations, both parties having given up their projected assemblages on account of the invasion of the State. The movement of companies and regiments of minute-men through the streets made them lively. The reception of an official dispatch of Gen. MEADE, and President LINCOLN's congratulatory address, created a furore, which soon extended throughout the city, raising intense enthusiasm among the masses, which found vent in cheer after cheer. Fireworks were promiscuously displayed. Mrs. Gen. MEADE was serenaded, and the city was alive with joy.

The Fourth in Boston.

BOSTON, Saturday, July 4, 1863.

The observance of the Fourth to-day was universal with our people, but with less noisy demonstrations than heretofore. The hopeful news from the battle-field, and the cheering message of President LINCOLN, created a profound sensation. The result of the great battles in Pennsylvania was the all-absorbing topic.

Regatta at Boston.

BOSTON, Saturday, July 4.

At the City Regatta, to-day, HAMMILL won the first prize of $100 in the single scull race, beating STEVENS, of Poughkeepsie; WEBBER, of Portland; and HARRINGTON and DOYLE, of Boston. HAMMILL and LEARY won the double scull race, beating WOODEN and DELANY, of Cold Spring, and HANCON and SARVIS, of Newburgh. The George F. Brown was beaten by the McClellan, a Boston boat, in the four-oared race. The six-oared race was won by the P. L. Tucker, of New-York, beating the Harvard crew and a Poukeepsie crew in the J. McKay.

Col. Palma di Cesnola, Fourth New-York Cavalry.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

One of your army correspondents, mentioned, a few days since, that this gallant officer was released from arrest, and presented with a sword on the battle-field at Aldie, for heroic conduct, and was afterward taken prisoner while fighting with the greatest valor.

Will you permit me to explain, why he was under arrest, and allude breifly to his character and capacity?

Of a noble family of Sardinia, educated in the best military schools of Europe, attached to the Staff of the Sardinian General-in-Chief during the Crimean war, and thus qualified by birth, education and experience for the duties of the field, he was a most accomplished gentleman as well as a brave soldier and skilful leader.

As soon as opportunity offered, he threw himself, with all his enthusiastic nature, into this contest, and has, without cessation, devoted his entire energies to deserve and win success. Beloved by officers and men alike, and excelling in the art of drilling and disciplining his troops, he always had his regiment in the best working order.

Gifted with a fine person and the most enthusiastic daring, he inspired his soldiers to follow him without hesitation into the very heart of the enemy.

At the cavalry fight at Brandy Station, he really performed wonders. Being senior officer, he was then in command of the origade to which his regiment was attached; and dashing upon the rebels with his usual impetuosity, scattered them in every direction, and pursued them until recalled by orders. In these charges he had several personal encounters with rebel officers and men, and a history of that daring ride would sound like romance.

Just previous to the Aldie fight Gen. GREGG was placed in command of the division embracing Col. CESNOLA's brigade, and by his (Gen. GREGG's) order, Col. Gregg, his brother, a junior officer to Col. CESNOLA, superseded the latter in command of the brigade.

Stung by this injustice, Col. CESNOLA addressed Gen. GREGG a warm remonstrance, the answer to which was an order of arrest.

When the bugle sounded for battle, however, he could not restrain his impatience, but rushing to the front entirely unarmed, encouraged his old regiment, by his cheering cries and dashing personal bravery, to the most heroic deeds.

Gen. KILPATRICK hailed him on the field, and commending his gallant conduct in the warmest terms, handed him a sword and bid him lead his men to victory.

While far in the advance he was surrounded by large numbers of the enemy, and although fighting gallantly to the last, he was finally overpowered and taken prisoner.

I have doubts if we have in the service a more accomplished and able cavalry officer, and it is to be hoped he will soon be exchanged and restored to his command, or promoted to a position where his talents and bravery can accomplish more for the country.

The Conscription.

AN IMPORTANT ORDER FROM THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

WAR DEPARTMENT, PROVOST-MARSHAL GENERAL'S OFFICE, WASHINGTON, D. C., June 30, 1863. [Circular No. 34.]

I. Section 13 of the act approved March 3, 1863, "For enrolling and calling out the National forces, and or other purposes," is as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That any person drafted, and not found to appear as aforesaid, may, on or before the day fixed for his appearance, furnish an acceptable substitute to take his place in the draft, or he may pay to such person as the Secretary of War may authorize to receive it, such sum, not exceeding $300, as the Secretary may determine, for the procuration of such substitute, which sum shall be fixed at a uniform rate by a General Order made at the time of ordering a draft for any State or Territory; and thereupon such person so furnishing a sub-titute, or paying the money, shall be discharged from further liability under that draft. And any person failing to report after due service of notice, as herein prescribed, without furnishing a substitute, or paying the required sum therefor, shall be deemed a deserter, shall be arrested by the Provost-Marshal, and sent to the nearest military post for trial by Court-Martial, unless, upon proper showing that he is not liable to do military duty, the Board of Enrollment shall relieve him from the draft.

It is hereby announced that the amount to be paid, in accordance with the foregoing section of the Enrollment act, by any person who may be drafted, in order to secure exemption from service, has been fixed by the Secretary of War at $300.

II. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue in each Congressional District has been authorized by the Secretary of War, and directed by the Secretary of the Treasury, to receive from drafted persons, who desire to pay it for the purpose of exemption, the money above specified. On receipt of this sum, the Collector of Internal Revenue shall give the drafted person paying it duplicate receipts. One copy of these receipts shall be delivered to the Board of Enrollment on or before the day the drafted person is required to report for duty, and when so delivered to the Board the drafted person shall be furnished by the Board with a certificate of exemption, "Form 31, Regulations of Provost-Marshal-General's Bureau," stating that the person is discharged from further liability under that draft by reason of having paid the sum of $300.

III. The Provost-Marshal shall make out within the first Monday of every week an abstract of persons to whom exemptions from military service shall have been granted by the Board during the week previous. "Form No. 21:" All receipts or certificates of deposit delivered to the Board by persons claiming exemption on account of having paid the required sum of money shall accompany the abstract.

JAMES B. FRY, Provost-Marsal-General.

BOOKS OF THE WEEK.

THE AMERICAN ANNUAL CYCLOPEDIA AND REGISTER OF IMPORTANT EVENTS OF THE YEAR 1862: Embracing Political, Civil, Military and Social Affairs, Public Documents, Biography, Statistics, Commerce, Finance, Literature, Science, Agriculture and Mechanical Industry. Vol. II. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co.

In the ever-thickening rush and crowd of events that characterizes our era, the necessity for a labor-saving contrivance like the present is felt by all. Unless recourse is had to arbitrary divisions of time—of which the year is most convenient—for a moment's pause to estimate, through the smoke of the conflict, the loss and gain of the battle of life, the moving panorama merely dazzles and deafens us. Unless its results are weighed and analyzed, we can derive no proper encouragement from its successes—no warning from its failures—no sure guidance for the future from the past. In every sense, this posting up of the world's books is an arduous labor, and it is, perhaps, this difficulty of performance which has left the field so long vacant in this country. In France, where the subdivision and economy of literary workmanship is better understood than anywhere, the system of "Annuaires," or YearlBooks, has been carried into almost every art and science, and the students of the fine arts, the drama, bibliography, archæology, the natural sciences, &c., can procure, at a moderate cost, careful résumés of all that the year has brought forth relative to their special pursuit; while two general works, the Annuaire des Deux Mondes and the Annuaire Historique enjoy an established reputation throughout Europe as the most trustworthy records of cotemporary history. In England, always backward in systematizing knowledge, the well-known Annual Register, now one hundred and five years old, is the only work of the kind that has met with an enduring existence. Since its early days, when EDMUND BURKE was editor, little known talent has been employed on it, and it retains to this day all the now inappropriate features of the original plan; yet it is undeniably a work indispensable for all public and private libraries intended for utility and reference. A like place we feel justified in claiming, unconditionally, for the infant enterprise of Messrs. APPLETONS, the second volume of which is now before us. The shape and title of the book has, no doubt, been determined by the New American Cyclopedia's becoming an accomplished fact—and the idea was a happy one of connecting with it a series of volumes that might serve as supplements, starting from the point of time where the Cyclopedia was concluded. As far as the independent existence of the work is concerned, it is a question whether the alphabetical form of a Cyclopedia affords the best method of arranging the events of the year. Much, however, depends on the tact of the editor, and in the volume the alphabetical classification is not adhered to, to the dislocation of kindred subjects. They are rather, indeed, massed together under general heads, as "Army Operations," (an admirable condensed military history of the year, of 150 pages,) "Confederate States," "Congress, United States," "Diplomatic Correspondence," "Literature and Literary Progress in 1863," "Navy of the United States," "Finances United States," "Exhibition, British Industrial; Illumination, artificial; Meteorology, &c., &c. The total number of headings or separate articles is 152, including one for each of the States and prominent countries of the world, under which the latest statistics of each is given, and a general chronological obituary garners up the names of the less illustrious dead of 1863, to whom a separate article is not allotted. In all practicable cases the best authorities have been resorted to, and their coöperation obtained, so that the articles are generally special monographs from the highest existing sources. We cannot doubt that the great cost and labor attending the preparation of this volume will be appreciated by a discerning public, and that it will prove the "fruitful parent of a hundred more."

ST. OLAVE'S. A Novel. New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

Late writers have shown that SYDNEY SMITH was entirely mistaken when he lamented the unfitness of the ministerial character for romance, and could think of no more appropriate speech from a clerical hero to his ladylove than "I will see you in the vestry after service." Since Mr. ANTHONY TROLLOPE's pleasant series of stories, having for their foundation the sayings and doings of the dignitaries of the Cathedral City of Barchester, the general tide has sat strongly in the same direction. For many years the military novel was in the ascendant, until it was fairly supplanted by the naval-stories of Capt. MARRYAT and his school. Ten Thousand a Year inaugurated the legal novel, since merged into the criminal or sensation class, of dubious renown; but for steady popularity of a safe kind, the clerical novel is undoubtedly the favorite type of fiction at present, in England—bishops and chapters, deacons, archdeacons, wardens, beadsmen and sextons have taken the place in our acquaintance of yore occupied by bos'nsmates, recruiting sergeants and villainous attorneys, and the expression, "parish politics," can no more be used disparagingly, for a "day of small things," when the interest of three-volumed novels turns on no more exciting topics. St. Olave's is a fair specimen of a novel of this class, apparently by a new author. The name is that of a Cathedral City, and most of the characters are professionally connected with it. The ecclesiological knowledge which Mr. TROLLOPE rather implies than details, is more laboriously "got up" by the author of St. Olave's, and sometimes rather overloads the scene; but the plot has interest, and the heroine is a sweet creature, who, after undeserved trials, is made happy at last by a love-match where artistic sympathies compensate for the losses of station and fortune.

PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE GREAT REBELLION OF THE UNITED STATES. Nos. 1—4. Folio; New-York: HARPER & BROTHERS.

This noble folio promises to be one of the finest illustrated books which the enterprise of the age has produced. Looking both to the interest of the subject and the beauty of its typographic and artistic execution, it will surely form the "Household Book" of the next generation, who, we trust, while turning over its storied leaves, will imbibe true patriotism from the lessons of endurance and of heroism, of self-sacrifice and suffering in a righteous cause, which its pages unfold. The mechanical resources of Messrs. HARPERS colossal establishment are well exhibited in the outward form of this "Pictorial History," and the literary portion is worthy of its accompaniments. It promises to form a thorough, careful, and impartial history of the war, based upon a laborious collection and comparison of all accessible materials. The size of the work will of course depend upon events now in progress, but the publishers hope to issue a number similar to those already out, every fortnight,—as much preparation has been bestowed on the enterprise, and a large part of the succeeding portion is in a forward state.

THE STORY OF MY CAREER: AS STUDENT AT FREIBURG AND JENA, AND AS PROFESSOR AT HALLE, BRESLAU AND BERLIN, with Personal Reminiscences of GOETHE, SCHILLER, SCHELLING, SCHLEIERMACHER, FICHTE, NOVALIS, SCHLEGEL, NEANDER and others. By HEINRICH STEFFENS. Translated by WILLIAM LEONHARD GAGE. 12mo. Boston: GOULD & LINCOLN.

This is a very fresh and pleasant book, and gives an insight into the domestic and professional life of the great literati of Germany, during the first quarter of the present century, that will be new to English readers. HAVERGOR STEFFENS, the author, was a Norwegian by birth, but came early under the influence of German culture, and, being furnished by the Danish Government with a traveling stipend, for purposes of scientific improvement, visited Germany, in his twenty-fifth year, and (with two or three years' exception, only) spent the remainder of his life in the Prussian dominions, successively as Student, Professor and Rector of the Universities of Breslau and Berlin. So thoroughly imbued with Teutonic feeling did STEFFENS become, that to him is attributed the glory of being the first that dared give expression to the hatred of French domination, which, when once avowed, commencing with the students, precipitated the whole people, as one man, against the hosts of NAPOLEON. STEFFENS' enthusiasm carried him to the war, and the detail of his adventures as "Second Lieutenant Mr. Professor STEFFENS," is an amusing episode in his scholastic career. Though he accompanied the Prussian army of invasion to Paris, and occasionally performed important services as Aid-de-Camp to BLUCHER, he makes no secret of the inaptitude for military discipline which usually relegated him to the "awkward squad." He retired to his academic shades at the earliest opportunity, with the personal thanks of the King for his patriotic self-devotion. As a naturalist and philosopher, STEFFENS was distinguished by the breadth and comprehension with which he viewed the phenomena of the physical world. His original sphere of study was mineralogy and geology, but in his latter years he lectured at Berlin on "comparative physiology, psychology, geology, and the philosophy of religion." As a colleague with RITTER and HUMBOLDT, his influence in spreading enlarged views of nature and the natural sciences in their unity as a whole is gratefully acknowledged by Prof. GUYOT, who ranks them together as the "three great minds who have breathed a new life into the science of the physical and moral world." In the decline of life STEFFENS published a voluminous autobiography, from which the present volume is condensed with admirable taste and intelligence by Mr. GAGE. His translation has great merit, and reproduces with success the easy flowing style in which STEFFENS, with the not ungraceful garrulity of honored age, recounts the hopes, fears, and struggles of his youth. The intimate terms of friendly association between STEFFENS and men of the class of Goethe, Schelling, the Schlegels, &c., who were pleased with the ardor of the young Scandinavian stranger, gives to his reminiscences the charm that can only arise from thorough and perfect knowledge of its subjects.

INCIDENTS IN MY LIFE. By D. D. HOME. With an Introduction by Judge EDMONDS. 1 vol, 12mo. New-York: CARLETON.

Viewed in any light, this is a remarkable little volume. It may be regarded as the cool and deliberate relation of a life-long imposture, carried on successfully in Europe and America, by one who, according to all testimony, including his own, is but imperfectly qualified for a deception of such magnitude. If this explanation fails, and the reality of the facts narrated be assumed, there is no doubt that our existing systems of philosophy, and possibly theology, want revising by the light of these new and strange phenomena. There seems no middle ground that can be taken with satisfaction, which may account for the strong feeling manifested in many quarters against the author and his book. Mr. HOME, who is a native of Scotland, enjoys hereditary claims to spiritual consideration—his mother, whom he accompanied to the United States, when nine years old, in 1842, being distinguished by the possession of the faculty of second sight. His earliest spiritual experiences commenced in his thirteenth year, when he was visited by the spirit of a schoolfellow, in pursuance of an agreement that the first of the two who died should acquaint the other with the fact. His subsequent career, as described in the memoir, being but a continuation of the same kind of adventures, need not be particularized. Mr. HOME seems, bodily, to be one of the frailest of mortals, and the fragility of his earthly frame excited the sympathy of his friends, and disposed them to believe in his spiritual pretensions. In England it is perhaps to the credit of the aristocracy that not much emotion was caused among them by the juvenile hierophant, and his principal supporters and attesting witnesses are men of the class of "Mr. J. J. Hutchinson, of the Stock Exchange," and "Mr. Cox, of Cox's Hotel, Jermyn-street," whose house must be henceforward famous for "spirits"—whether above or below proof, we shall not venture to decide. On the Continent the scene was entirely changed, and the doors of palaces, the gilded barriers of the most exclusive circles of Europe, opened to welcome Mr. HOME, until his high fortunes culminated in his marriage, while a guest at the Imperial Palace at St. Petersburgh, with the daughter of General Count KROLL, a god-daughter of the Emperor NICHOLAS. The subsequent story is a melancholy one, from the death of the lady (of whose charming character and sufferings MARY HOWITT and Mrs. S. C. HALL give pathetic accounts) by consumption, in her twenty-second year. The spiritual experiences recorded have generally a wearisome sameness, and the extraordinary "platitudinous" tone which runs through all the spirit literature we have seen, is conspicuous in the specimens here given. It is a positive achievement to write so much of this matter lately inflicted on the world, with such sickening tameness and mawkishness, from wherever it comes. Mr. HOME tells us: "A very popular idea in Paris was, that I carried about a tame monkey in my pocket, trained to assist me;" and the conception does honor to French ingenuity, while it adequately characterizes the usual manifestations. Amidst all these jingling bells, tipping tables and twanging accordeons, it is a relief to meet, in Anno Domini, 1856, with a genuine ghost story of the old school, laid in a decayed Italian villa, near Florence. An English family are disturbed by a bad spirit, who grasps people with a "long, yellow, shining hand, clammy and horrible," chills the air with an icy coldness, and declares in mediæval Italian that he was the ghost of a "Fra Giannana," who died in the apartment centuries ago. But he, however, yields to Mr. HOME's more potent witchery.

MONEY. By CHARLES MORAN. 12mo. New-York: D. APPLETON & Co.

Mr. MORAN's little volume grew out of the discussion of his subject at the meetings of a recently organized "Society for the Advancement of Political and Social Science" in New-York, where the want was felt of a manual work, in which "money," in its widest sense, should be considered and analyzed in its most important practical phases. As regards the two great divisions of opinion on this question, the author is emphatically an Anti-Bullionist, and apprehends the popular impression that restricts to gold and silver the title of money, and assumes them to constitute true wealth, to be not only unfounded, but most prejudicial to a proper understanding of the matter. In his view money is a mere instrument, that facilitates the exchanges of commodities and services, and all attempts by authority to preserve a relation between specie and paper currency are the fertile source of financial panics and embarrassments. Banknotes issued without any Government restriction and representatives of real value, form the currency Mr. MORAN would most approve, and wherever the arbitrary rule which enacts that they shall be redeemable in coin on demand is done away with, they will be freely issued to those who will pay interest for them, and furnish ample security for their return within a specified time. The book shows evidence of a careful study of the leading French and English economical writers. The author confesses that there is to day a greater difference of opinion on the subject of money, than on almost any other topic of political economy, yet he appeals confidently to the past and present financial phenomena of our own and other countries, in support of his theory, by which all anomalies in this vexed question are explained and reconciled. The book undoubtedly claims attention at a season like the present, when its principles are tested by a gigantic experiment.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW. April, 1863, American Edition. New-York: LEONARD SCOTT & Co.

This number contains several articles of interest, including a sketch of "The American War—Fort Sumter to Fredericksburgh." It is based chiefly upon the Rebellion Record, a publication deservedly praised for its fairness and impartiality. This latter quality is one the writer has but imperfectly imitated, though with a few mistakes—as where it is said in South Carolina "Gen. BURNSIDE was dislodged from the position on James Island"—and misrepresentation, there is less bias against the North than is shown in many other publications of greater liberal pretensions than the "London" Quarterly, (as Mr. SCOTT will persist in misprinting its title.) "The History of Cyclopedias" is learnedly discussed with much curious literary history, and praise is given to "RIPLEY and DANA's New American Cyclopedia" for its thorough treatment of the languages and situation of the different nations of Europe. "Sensation Novels" is a protest against what the writer considers a crying evil in literature, though his definition of the class is far from exact or satisfactory. "Kinglake's Crimea" exposes the ill-regulated partisan spirit, both national and personal, which disfigures Mr. KINGLAKE'S book, and will go far to deprive it of the value which his ability and careful study of the subject would otherwise have given it.

THE SCALPEL; an Entirely Original Quarterly Exposition of the Laws of Health, and Abuses of Medicine and Domestic Life.

We are glad to be in receipt of the Forty-sixth number of this justly celebrated journal; and if we could, would place it in the hands of every one who thinks his mind and body of sufficient value to be preserved in a sound state. The author, Dr. EDWARD H. DIXON, has a way peculiarly his own of dissecting the follies and humbugs of the day, whether practiced by charlatans or the "regular schools." His common sense views of the laws of life and health are worth all the pills in the apothecary shops. We almost despair of ever seeing the rules of reason and science applied to the generation and education of the human race, but every philosophic mind must desire to see these subjects brought as much as possible within the domain of enlightened investigation. Dr. DIXON has been, for years, a conscientious and bold pioneer in this field of study and labor, and has reaped the usual reward of Reformers, in the dislike and bitter opposition of "conservatives" and class interests. But he goes on his way rejoicing and successful. His Scalpel has a reputation in Europe and in this country, which it well deserves. It is filled with sound maxims for preserving health, by keeping out of the hands of doctors and paying proper attention to food, air and exercise. The author's experiences, reported from his own practice, and his descriptive cases of operative surgery, are often profoundly thrilling, possessing the interest of a novel with the exactness and instruction of scientific demonstrations.

The Scalpel is furnished by the publisher, EVERARDUS WARD, No. 1 Vesey-street, at 25 cents a copy.

AFFAIRS IN JAPAN.

The English Demands—An Extension of Time.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

YOKOHAMA, Monday, May 4, 1863.

At the date of my last letter about half the twenty days of the English ultimatum to the Japan Government had expired. The convention at Miaco, where the Taicoon had gone in obedience to the call of the Spiritual head of the Empire, to meet the Great Princes of the land, was still in sitting.

The object of this Convention was understood to be for the purpose of taking into consideration the all important question to Japan, of foreign intercourse. It is a somewhat strange though important coincidence, that the demands of the English Government, which are calculated to test to the utmost the real spirit of the nation on this subject, should have been made at this time. I stated in my last, it will be remembered, that I thought, under the circumstances, the time given the Japanese Government to comply with the demands too short; also, that I feared this alone, if nothing else, would more or less complicate matters—and so it has proven. On the sixteenth day of the twenty of the time named in the ultimatum, the Japan Government called upon Mr. PRUYN, our Minister, to request his mediation in the matter, and obtain if possible an extension of the first named time. He consequently had an interview with the English Minister which resulted in fifteen days more being granted the Japan Government in which to give its final decision. Our treaty with this country, in the first clause of Article 23, reads thus: "The President of the United States, at the request of the Japanese Government, will act as a friendly mediator in such matters of difference as arise between the Government of Japan and the European Powers." However much Mr. PRUYN may have sympathized with the English in their just indignation for repeated outrages on their subjects by the Japanese, it will be seen that as the representative of our country, appointed by the President, he was in honor bound to act in the matter if requested to by the Japanese.

We doubt not but he, too, felt that the time first given was too short, and hoped by giving them a little more, an amicable adjustment of the affair might be arrived at. A great blunder we may say was committed by those who are conducting this affair at the commencement. They should have taken all the circumstances of the times into consideration—the Emperor's absence from his Capitol, in a country where communication is slow—the occasion of his visit to Miaco—the great National Convention that was to follow, &c.

The demands of the English are not difficult to comply with if the country chooses to do it. We say the country, because whatever conclusion has been come to on the subject is the voice of the nation. Heretofore it has been rumored that the spiritual Emperor ignored the acts of the Government at Yedo in the matter of treaties with foreigners; and again, that the 18 great Princes, or a large majority of them, are opposed to foreign intercourse. At other times we hear exactly the opposite is the case, and we can but come to the conclusion that we know very little about it, which is without doubt the most sensible one we can possibly arrive at.

A few more days and the problem will be solved, in part, at least. We can but await the result.

The available fleet of the English in this harbor are 13 sail, all told. There are two Dutch and one French men-of-war here, as spectators only, as far as it is known. We feel very much the want of a man-of-war to represent our country here. We are hoping that soon the Wyoming, now in dock, at Amoy, China, will be up here soon, when we should feel more at our ease, in case hostilities are entered into.

PERSONAL.

—The New Haven Journal has this curious paragraph. "Some ten months ago, Mr. Charles Monroe, of Fair Haven, was at Lagos and at Accra, on the Guinea Coast, whither he had sailed as Mate, with Capt. Post, in the Bark Elizabeth, and while there he drank of the water of that part of the world, without thinking to take the precautions commonly in use among the natives for the prevention of a terrible disease known as Guinea worm. It appears that the Africans always boil this water before drinking in order to destroy the minute, invisible egg of the worm, which is so small that it is absorbed by the blood vessels from the stomach, and is in that manner distributed in different parts of the body, usually the legs, where it is hatched, and after a long time, makes its appearance in the shape of a white thread-like worm, pointed on both ends, and it twines and twists all about the muscles and veins and arteries, producing no particular feeling of uneasiness until some part of its body comes near the skin, when bad inflammations take place. It was in March last that Mr. MONROE began to be troubled with them, and for three months he has not walked a step. He is now in the Connecticut State Hospital under treatment, and one worm has been taken from the bottom of his foot that measures over two feet long. The way it is done is this: When the surface of the skin is so pricked or irritated as to show where the "critter" is, a thread is fastened to him and a small weight attached to the other end of the thread. The worm gets tired of pulling against so steady a strain and gives ground a trifle day by day, and as he comes out, a little spool winds him up until he is all out. The pain is very great—for forty nights Mr. MONROE hardly slept on account of the suffering. One worm is now in process of being drawn from his heel, and those medical men who have never seen a case of the kind are much interested. Great care has to be taken not to pull too hard, because the worm would break and the trouble be much prolonged. It first appears under the skin like a varicose vein, and after a painful boil has been formed and broken, the head of the animal is discovered.

Native Citizens Born Abroad.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice in an editorial in this morning's paper, (July 1,) you state that Gen. MEADE is not eligible to the Presidency by reason that he was born in Spain.

Such was the law; but I think you will find that in 1855 or 56 it was amended so as to declare all persons born of American parents temporarily abroad, native born.

Having a child born at Dusseldorf, I particularly interested myself in the matter, and by the active efforts of Mr. CURTIS, then a member of Congress from this City, the change was effected. The amendment included all those born before its enactment as well as those to be born.

THE TURF.

Great Trotting Match on Fashion Course for $1,000, on July 4.

There has not been a closer or more exciting contest during the present season, than the one which took place on Saturday, between the gray mare, Nellie Holcomb, driven by DAN. MACE, and the buckskin gelding, General McClellan, driven by HIRAM WOODRUFF. The contest was to a sulky, (in harness,) mile heats, best three in five, and McClellan was the favorite, at $100 to $40. Nellie won the first two heats; on which such another scene of consternation and long faces, as appeared among the betters at long odds, we have seldom seen—some of whom made random bets, by way of hedging, such as $100 to $20 on the mare. McClellan—although his fortunes for the time appeared to be obscured—finally won, to the great delight of his numerous backers. There were about 1,500 people at the course, who were unanimous in their opinion that it was one of those contests which give more real satisfaction than many of greater pretensions, and in which the time is within four or five seconds as fast. The mare proved herself a good one, and but for the superior handling of the General by HIRAM, might have carried off the laurels.

First Heat—The gray had the track, and dashed off with the lead, and entered the turn a length ahead; the General lapped her at the quarter pole, and broke, but was got down again, and was only 1½ lengths behind at the half mile; he lapped her again at the three-quarter pole, where he broke up also, and fell off half a dozen lengths, repeating the break again on the home stretch, and Nellie came past the stand three lengths in advance. Time, 2:31.

Second Heat.—An even start, and McClellan took the lead and inside track on entering the turn; on entering the back-stretch the mare was neck-and-neck with the General, and a prettier sight was never seen than the contest to the half-mile pole, which was done at a tremendous pace; at this point the General broke up and lost a couple of lengths before he got down again, repeating the same thing at the three-quarter pole; he made a fine brush for the lead on the home-stretch, and lapped the mare at the distance stand, where he broke up again, Nellie winning by a length under a strong pull. Time, 2:28.

Third Heat—A good start, McClellan breaking and falling off a length on entering the turn, lapping at quarter, where the gray broke and gave way for McClellan, who passed the half-mile a length in front, and was lapped in the turn by the mare, but shook her off a length by square trotting as they passed the three-quarter pole; but, breaking up again on the home-stretch, he was yoked by the mare, who broke up just at the distance stand, and McClellan came home the winner of the heat, amid great cheering, in 2:30½.

Fourth Heat—McClellan out-trotted Nellie round the turn, and led three lengths past the quarter pole, and increased the distance slightly at the half mile; he broke up in the three-quarter turn, allowing Nellie to close up before he got down again, but finally won the heat in 2:31¾.

Fifth Heat—The gray mare behaved badly at the start, and broke up on entering the first turn, and before she could be steadied down, McClellan had passed the quarter pole fully six lengths in advance; and made the half mile in 1:14, without a skip; in fact, he trotted splendidly throughout, and won the heat with plenty in hand on a jog-trot in 2:31¾. The mare also showed some splendid trotting after she got out of the first turn, and her tantrums; but it was no use for DAN MACE trying, as HIRAM WOODRUFF secured the victory for the McClellanites.

Homicide in the Eighteenth Precinct.

A MAN FATALLY STABBED IN AN AFFRAY.

About 3 o'clock on the morning of the 4th inst., a fight occurred among a large party of Irishmen, who were attending a dance at Mulgrove Hall, corner of Third-avenue and Twenty-second-street, during which THOMAS MCAVOY was stabbed in the abdomen with a large knife in the hands of PETER MCGRAIL. The wound inflicted was large and deep, and immediately after the injuries were inflicted, the intestines of the wounded man had to be held up by himself to keep them from the ground. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where he died early on Saturday evening. Previous to his death, Coroner RANNEY visited him, and took his ante-mortem examination, of which the following is the substance. In all important particulars it is corroborative of the evidence given on the inquest, yesterday:

Thomas McAvoy deposed that he resided in Avenue A, between Seventeenth and Eighteenth-streets; he believed himself to be in a dying condition; between two and three o'clock A. M. on the 4th inst. he was standing with six or eight others on the walk near the corner of Twenty-second-street and Third-avenue; there was a dance in a house close by; James Brady was invited by deponent to take a drink, and the two went to a place kept by Clancey in Twenty-second-street; when they arrived at the saloon, they found Michael Bone and James Costello there, beside several strangers; a quarrel ensued and Bone, Brady and one Patrick Henry were attacked and more or less injured; they then went out to Dr. Cooper's to get some medicine for Henry; on Twenty-second-street they met some members of No. 51 Engine, and in company with the latter they went back to Clancey, in order to ascertain who had injured Henry; as they approached the drinking place they saw several parties fighting before the door; as deceased went up he saw a large man come toward him with a large knife in his hand; when they met he suddenly plunged the knife into deceased's abdomen, at the same time saying "You son of a —— what do you want?"

An inquest was held upon the body yesterday at the Eighteenth Precinct Station-house, by Coroner RANNEY. The Jury rendered a verdict "that the deceased came to his death from stabs inflicted with a knife in the hands of PETER MCGRAIL, of No. 126 East Twenty-second-street." The latter was immediately arrested and committed to the Tombs. He is a shoemaker, aged about 30 years.

BROOKLYN NEWS.

A MILITARY ORGANIZATION FOR HOME DEFENCE—The exempt members and officers of the Fifth brigade, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Twenty-eighth and Seventieth regiments, met on Thursday evening and resolved to form an organization for home defence and to preserve order in the city during the absence of the regular militia regiments. Col. A. M. HOOD was chosen commanding officer, and the following named gentlemen were appointed Captains to form ten companies: Company A, Capt. Stilwell; company B, Capt. Chas. Steers; company C, Capt. Morris; company D, Capt. Allen; company E, Capt. Tobin; company F, Capt. John Burns; company G, Capt. Hyer; company H, Capt. Stephen Kidder; company I, Capt. Wm. Brown; company K, Capt. Brownell. All citizens who choose to enroll themselves in this organization can do so either at the City Armory, corner of Henry and Cranberry streets, or the Arsenal in Portland-avenue.

ELECTION OF FIRE WARDENS.—The Trustees of the Brooklyn Fire Department, W. D., held an election for Fire Wardens on the evening of the 3d inst., resulting in the election of Messrs. WILLIAMS and BARR by the following vote:

Richard Williams	21	Scattering	28
Robert Barr	28

Mr. BARR is reelected, and Mr. WILLIAMS is chosen in place of Mr. AVILLA, whose term has expired.

FOUND DEAD IN THE STREET.—A man was found dead in Atlantic-street, near Hoyt, on Saturday night. No marks of violence were visible, except a few scratches in the face. Deceased was about 45 years old, dressed in a black coat, light vest and pants. Nothing was found on his person to indicate his name or residence.

MONETARY AFFAIRS.

MONDAY, July 6—A. M.

The Foreign Trade of the past week improved largely over the previous fortnight in the line of Exports; the difficulties with the stevedore being overcome. The Import entries also show an improvement, and the Customs, notwithstanding the Holiday, amount to nearly a million of dollars. The export demand for Specie continues very light, while several considerable parcels have come in from New-Orleans. The market for Money has assumed more steadiness in the supply to the Brokers, and the rates at the close of the business week on Friday were easier. The payments into the Treasury for the five days for the New Loan of 1882 amount to $5,062,850, and there have been sufficient to keep up the balance in the New-York office to the large figure reported for several weeks previous.

The Stock and Gold markets were kept somewhat feverish early in the week by the change of commanders and preparations for battle in the Army of the Potomac, and the threatening advances of the enemy into Pennsylvania. But on Thursday and Friday there was an improved confidence. Gold fell below the closing price of the week before. Government Stocks and Treasury paper rose in price and demand, and speculation in the Railway Shares took a strong upward turn. The most marked depression in the latter was on Monday and Tuesday, while at the close on Friday prices had not only recovered the decline, but stood higher on most descriptions than on Saturday week, as will be seen from the following table:

COURSE OF THE STOCK EXCHANGE FOR THE WEEK.

American Gold Coin	145½ @147¾ @143½
U. S 6 ₱ cents. 1881	104½ @105¾ xd

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

Our news from the great battlefield of Gettysburgh this morning is of the most cheering and satisfactory character. The great battle of Friday—the third in the series—proves to have been by far the most desperate one of the war, and to have resulted in the complete discomfiture of the enemy. At daylight Lee's right-wing batteries opened upon our left, and shortly afterward those of his centre followed, but little damage being done by his fire. Soon afterward an impetuous infantry attack was made upon our right, which was repulsed after a sharp struggle—the enemy leaving a considerable number of prisoners in our hands. There was then a lull of several hours, and at 10 o'clock Lee, having massed about 80 pieces of artillery, opened a terrific cannonade upon our centre, but their range being imperfect, it did comparatively little damage to us, and was replied to by our artillery with the best effect. Under cover of this fire, Lee advanced his columns of infantry, and made several desperate attempts to carry our lines by assault, but each successive charge was repulsed with terrific havoc in the rebel ranks. About 4½ o'clock, P. M., the fire of the enemy's artillery slackened, and at 5 it had entirely ceased, and their infantry had withdrawn to cover. During the latter we captured upwards of 3,000 prisoners, and lost but very few. Longstreet is very positively stated to have been mortally wounded, and to have fallen into our hands. Gen. Hill is said by prisoners to have been killed outright during the battle.

The official dispatches from Gen. Meade to the War Department are brief, but corroborates the statements made by our correspondents regarding the events of the battle. At the close of the engagement, he says, the movements of the enemy induced him to believe a retreat was intended. He accordingly pushed forward a strong reconnoissance, which found the enemy in force. On the morning of Saturday, the Fourth, however, it was found that the enemy had withdrawn from the position occupied by him on the day previous, abandoning a large number of killed and wounded on the field. Gen. Meade's latest dispatch is dated 8½ o'clock A. M. yesterday.

News was received in Baltimore yesterday afternoon that the rebels were in full retreat.

The latest dispatch received last night states, on the authority of a correspondent just arrived in Baltimore from the battle-field, that the rout of Lee was most thorough, and that, in endeavoring to escape, Gen Pleasanton cut off his retreat in the Gap leading to Chambersburgh. We are said to have captured 118 pieces of artillery, and from 15,000 to 20,000 prisoners.

Gov. Curtin, of Pennsylvania, our correspondent at Harrisburgh informs us, anticipates the surrender of the whole of Lee's army. The militia force under Gen. Smith has advanced to important positions, and Chambersburgh is occupied by our troops,

Maj.-Gen. French, in a dispatch dated at Frederick, Saturday evening, informs the War Department that an expedition sent by him on the night previous, had succeeded in destroying the enemy's pontoon bridge over the Potomac, at Williamsport, capturing the guard. The Potomac is now very high, in consequence of the recent rains, and the rebels will in consequence find it very difficult to recross the Potomac.

The dispatches from Jeff. Davis to Lee, captured by our scouts, prove to be of the most important character. They are in substance a peremptory order for Lee to withdraw from Pennsylvania, and for his transportation to fall back to Hagerstown at once—the reasons assigned being that his position is too hazardous, and that the condition af Richmond is too defenceless to warrant his remaining in Pennsylvania longer.

About 6,000 rebel prisoners had already arrived in Baltimore last evening, and more were on the way.

Official advices from Vicksburgh, to the 29th ult., state that everything was going on cheeringly.

The Navy Department has received information of the capture of two steamers and a sloop in the Gulf of Mexico—the iron paddle-wheel steamer Neptune, of Glasgow, bound from Havana to Mobile; the rebel steamer Planter, from Mobile for Havana, and the sloop John Wesley, from St. Marks for Havana.

The pirate Alabama is reported to be again cruising on the track of the Aspinwall steamers.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Havana steamer which arrived yesterday brings later Mexican news, confirming the report received by way of Acapulco and San Francisco, that the French had been allowed to occupy the Mexican capital without opposition. A portion of the French army entered the city on the 4th inst., and Forey made his triumphal entry on the 10th of June.

The steamship Northern Light arrived at this port yesterday from Aspinwall on the 26th ult. The news is of no importance. She brought $251,947 24 in treasure.

Advices from Venezuela indicate that the troubles in that country have broken out afresh. Martinez is reported at the head of a new revolutionary movement.

Gettysburgh.—The rebels have fought their first battle on the soil of the Free States. It is rather likely to be their last. In its nature and results it has not been sufficiently encouraging for them to try it again.

The Triumph of the Army of the Potomac.

The Army of the Potomac, under its new leader, has won its greatest victory. The tremendous actions of the first three days of the month of July at Gettysburgh have been followed by the complete discomfiture of the entire rebel army, which so audaciously and exultingly crossed the Potomac, and planted itself on Pennsylvania soil less than a fortnight ago. Entertaining not a doubt of triumph, it advanced with flying banners, defiant shouts, and steady tread. From the Rappahannock to the Blue Ridge, from the mountains to the Potomac, from the Potomac to the Susquehanna, they swept unmolested over a distance of two hundred miles: and at the beginning of last week, were just preparing to consummate their triumphant campaign. They contemned the Army of the Potomac, sneered at its late leader, and boasted that they could kick him and his army around the continent. Their commander had already led them in five great campaigns, two of them in their inception offensive, two defensive, and one what Jomini styles offensive-defensive; and all of them they regarded as victorious. There were but three things more needed to insure their final success, and these were—to route the Army of the Potomac, capture Washington, and hold their army on our soil until they could dictate terms of peace and enforce the recognition of the Southern Confederacy. By the seizure of Philadelphia and Baltimore, they could also thoroughly humiliate us, and after the fashion they established at York, could fill the coffers of the Confederacy, and gratify their army with plunder. Their task was simple and their assurance unbounded.

So at least it appeared last Monday. So it appeared on the first day of the month of July.

But their lately exultant and defiant army of invasion—where is it, and what is it now?

Defeated in the very opening of the campaign. Defeated in three great battles in which their whole force of infantry, cavalry and artillery was engaged. Defeated by the Army of the Potomac. Defeated by Gen. Meade, who then fought his first battle at the head of the army. Defeated with tremendous loss in killed and wounded, in prisoners and in artillery; and defeated when defeat was destruction. Defeated after struggling for three days with a fury more than mortal and an energy madder than that of despair.

Thus it stood on Friday night, and thus upon our army rose the Fourth of July, ghastly but glorious—gloomy as death for the rebellion, but bright with hope for the country.

We are not yet informed what has become of Lee and the remnant of his army since Friday night. We know that they have fled somewhere among the mountains, and are probably trying to make their way to the Potomac, over which they would now be glad to bear drooping the banners which but late they bore to this side proudly flaunting. We know that our army holds Gettysburgh, Chambersburgh—that an expedition has been sent out from Hagerstown, which has destroyed the pontoon bridge over the Potomac at Williamsport, and that the river has risen—perhaps so high as to make a sudden and successful fording of it impossible. We can only hope that our reserve force, the Pennsylvania militia and the troops of Gen. Heintzelman will consummate the work so gloriously executed by Gen. Meade, and see that this insolent army of invasion never gets back to Richmond or offers us any more trouble.

Through the brief campaign Gen. Meade's genius has shone resplendent. Taking the army at the most inauspicious moment, and under the most inauspicious circumstances, he has, within four days of that on which he assumed command, achieved these results. It is the work of eminent military genius—of genius such as has not heretofore been displayed in this war. His adversary was a good soldier, who had the prestige of past success—though we have never seen any reason to class him as a great military chief, as some have been so hasty to do. But his strategy on this occasion was bold, and was only defeated by the more masterly and heroic combinations of Gen. Meade. The choice of the President and the officers of the army has been amply confirmed and approved by the result of this great battle. He also had able coöperation in his corps, and division and brigade commanders, and every one of them achieved undying honor, and proved himself worthy of his position.

The Army of the Potomac too, will now, more than ever, receive the admiration of the country. Its struggles for two years have been unparalleled, and often unsuccessful. But it has never lost its faith nor its valor, nor its inflexibility of purpose. It has been willing ever to serve and to struggle, to fight always, everywhere, and under all circumstances, to the death. To all its other and perhaps greater claims to admiration, it now adds that of the most honorable and complete success. Its heroic struggle during the three first days of July will forever adorn the annals of war, and of the American Republic.

What Pennsylvania has Escaped.

Immediately preceding the present invasion of Pennsylvania all the newspapers of rebeldom were for weeks filled with the most fearful and false accounts of atrocities committed by our armies in different parts of the Confederacy. The indiscriminate butchery of old men, little babies and women—arson, robbery, rape, general rapine and the freeing of slaves, were among the crimes of which we were always and on every opportunity guilty. Jeff. Davis' barrel-organ, the Richmond Enquirer, played on these tunes of horror louder and more madly than any of its cotemporaries. On the 6th of June, just at the time when the rebel army was starting out on its career of invasion, it published an article under the caption of "Barbaric War," in which accusations of Yankee atrocities were piled up, until the rebel brain must have reeled in reading of them. In conclusion, it entered upon a series of historical parallels, in which one of the mildest and most chivalric of our Generals was compared to "Genseric, the King of the Vandals;" another to "Caracalla, the Beast;" others to Galerius, Gallienus, and similar monsters; and, to an act of one national officer, it could only find a parallel in Timour the Tartar, "who massacred one hundred thousand prisoners because they smiled when an army of their countrymen came in sight!" Lincoln's policy was characterized in brief to be that of Gallienus—"Tear, kill, hew in pieces!"

The object of all this nonsense, at that moment, is apparent. It was to "fire the Southern heart," on the eve of invasion. Some may think that even Confederate rebels would laugh at such stuff, and that they must have known from the evidence of their own senses that it was all falsehood and fiction. But the mere fact that it was gravely printed and reprinted, is proof that it was expected to find grave believers. And there is no doubt that it had its effect on the rebel hordes. Gen. Lee, it is true, on entering the State, had to keep his army from entering at the first on all career of general ravagement, as such a course would at once have resulted in complete military demoralization. But had he defeated the army of Gen. Meade, and captured the Capital of Pennsylvania, then he could have given loose reign to the passions of his soldiery, and we have no doubt that Pennsylvania would have been the scene of atrocities quite as horrible as those of the barbaric Generals and military hordes to whom our gallant army was compared. Indeed, an article in Davis' organ, only a few days ago, explicitly set forth that a terrible system of retaliation was to be put in operation as soon as the Army of the Potomac was defeated, and the rebels got a foothold in Pennsylvania.

In this connection, the Richmond Whig, of Thursday last, the 2d instant, suggests a fantastic and fiendish atrocity upon Pennsylvania that would quite cast in the shade our "atrocity" of the stone-blockade of Charleston harbor, which so filled the world with horror. The suggestion is to this effect:

"The Coal Fields of Pennsylvania.—If it be true that the Confederate forces occupy Harrisburgh, the attention of the Commanding General will no doubt be directed to the coal fields, which lie within forty or fifty miles of that city. His first aim will be to cut all the railroad connections, and thus put a stop to the transportation of fuel. His next will be to destroy the most costly and not easily replaced machinery of the pits. Whether he would stop at this is questionable. He might set fire to the pits, withdraw the forces sent out on this special duty, and leave the heart of Pennsylvania on fire, never to be quenched until a river is turned into the pits, or the vast supply of coal is reduced to ashes.

All that is needed is to seize the anthracite fields, destroy the roads and the machinery of the pits, set fire to the various mines and leave them. Northern industry will thus be paralyzed at a single blow.

These views may have induced Gen. Lee to move upon Harrisburgh. We doubt whether he would fire the mines, but the destruction of the Mauch Chunk Railroads and pit-implements would be as legitimate as blowing up tunnels and aqueducts or burning bridges. Of one thing we may be sure—that whatever is best to be done will be done by Gen. Lee, and if he thinks fit to destroy the Pennsylvania mines, they will certainly be destroyed. Should he leave them untouched, it will be for the best of reasons. But it is impossible not to indulge the hope that he will avail himself of the tremendous power which the possession of the coal fields, even temporarily, would confer."

Major-Gen. Sickles.—The misfortune of no one whose lot it has been to be smitten in this war has excited a livelier sympathy than the painful injury sustained in the late battle by Gen. Daniel E. Sickles. Toward the close of the very sanguinary conflict of Thursday last, he was struck on the left leg below the knee by a fragment of a shell, and the wound was so severe that amputation became necessary. At last accounts he was doing well, and there is a hope, amounting almost to confidence, that his life and services will be spared to the country.

New-York State and City owe a debt of peculiar gratitude to Gen. Sickles. He it is that, in the most signal manner, has proved what militia are capable of, when led by a brave man, even without the advantages of a regular military education. The "Excelsior Brigade," organized by Gen. Sickles, the title taken from our State's proud motto, was so disciplined and led by him as to make for itself a reputation not surpassed by that of the veterans of a Napoleon or Wellington. It has written its claim to honors in blood on every battle-field in Virginia, and in the late conflict at Gettysburgh showed itself worthy of its previous renown.

Gen. Sickles has literally carved his way to fame with his sword. As Commander of the Excelsior Brigade he made himself worthy of a Major-General's commission, and obtained it. As Commander of a division he showed his fitness for a still wider sphere, and was appointed to lead a corps. The detailed accounts of the battle of Chancellorsville proved how much the country owed to his cool bravery and to the unblenching valor of his Third corps that the repulse of the Army of the Potomac on that occasion did not reach a disaster. After a late respite of a few weeks from labor, Gen. Sickles returned to his corps in time to lead it to new glory in the still more terrible battles of Gettysburgh. Here, as at Chancellorsville, he bore on Thursday the brunt of the enemy's most desperate attack, and here he fell, but not fatally, and not until the army of Gen. Lee had spent its strength in vain trying to break the Union line of battle so gallantly held by the Third and Fifth army corps. When the roll of heroes is written for this war, one of the highest on the list will be that of Gen. Daniel E. Sickles, and New York will justly claim him as her own.

Gov. Seymour's Speech.

Gov. Seymour has our sympathies. Whether he was trammeled by party bonds or whether he was personally incapable of taking any larger view of the great theme which formed the topic of his speech on Saturday, we think him equally entitled to commiseration. With a rebel army pushing to the very heart of the Northern States—in the very climax of a war which threatens utter and final ruin to the great Republic whose birth-day he was aiding to celebrate, Gov. Seymour could find no more timely or inspiring topic than the degeneracy of our people and the tyranny of the Government which is trying to save the life of the nation. Not a word of condemnation for the rebels in arms—not a syllable of hope or encouragement for those who are fighting against them,—not an effort to rouse the patriotic fervor and courage of the thousands who heard him. His only complaints were against the Government: his only grievances were personal and political, and his only appeals were to party prejudices and resentments that ought to be buried forever until the country has been delivered from the peril that overhangs it.

Gov. Seymour is engaged in a vigorous attempt to rally the country against the Government on the ground that it has violated the rights of individuals. He affects to believe that the liberties of the country are in danger from this source. We will not insult his intelligence by believing him sincere in this belief. No one knows better than Gov. Seymour that the instances of arbitrary conduct which absorb his attention have been rare and exceptional, and have taken place under the strong conviction of an overwhelming public necessity. He knows that the Government has been struggling to defend itself against a powerful rebellion, and to save from overthrow that Constitution which affords the only guarantee for the personal liberties and civil rights which we enjoy, and, if he values these rights as highly as he pretends, he would have no difficulty in seeing from what quarter they are really threatened. It is not an isolated arrest under martial law which menaces our liberties. It is the armed tread of rebel hosts, tramp'ing under foot the Constitution and the laws, and threatening to crush out the last vestige of Republican freedom that the country has most to fear. Why is Gov. Seymour so blind and deaf to this danger, while he is so keenly sensitive to the temporary and passing inconveniences inseparable from a state of war?

We have no desire to censure a reasonable and timely solicitude for personal rights and individual liberties. Our people are justly jealous of all encroachments upon them. But in the presence of perils infinitely more pressing and momentous, it seems a mockery thus to magnify these paltry evils and fasten upon them public anxiety and public effort which are needed elsewhere. Such a course is not consistent with an intelligent and patriotic devotion to the public good. It has its origin in other motives. It is one of the baser growths of party spirit—of that narrow and selfish ambition which prefers party success to the public welfare. We regret to find the Governor of this State, at such a crisis as this, weak enough thus to sacrifice the momentous interests of the nation to the petty calculations of party success.

Affairs in Louisiana.

The news from New-Orleans is not encouraging. The military force in Gen. Banks' Department has not been kept sufficiently strong to do all the work required of it. Too many regiments of nine months men were sent thither; and though Gen. Banks has used his forces with marvelous economy and success, he could not maintain the strength of his army, so constantly weakened by the expiration of the time for which his troops had enlisted.

Although the position in Louisiana is, on this account, not favorable, but one disaster has as yet been sustained. That is the loss of Brashear City. But this is a severe loss. Brashear City is the Western terminus of the New-Orleans and Opelousas railroad, and is situated eighty miles west of the city of New-Orleans, on Berwick's Bay. This Bay is connected by the Atchafalaya River with the Gulf on the south, and with the Red River on the north. Brashear City is the base of all military operations in Western Louisiana. From this point Gen. Banks set out on his late brilliant and victorious march from Berwick's Bay to Alexandria. In losing Brashear City we lose command of the admirable inland system of water communication that has served the Union cause so well in Louisiana.

The loss of material of war in the loss of Brashear City proves to be considerable. Berwick's Bay was commanded by about twenty-five of the best cannon we had in the Southwest, all of which fell into the enemy's hands. In addition, there was abundant ammunition and subsistence stores for the garrison, probably less than one thousand in number. The entire garrison, including some hundreds of wounded and sick, was captured; and, lastly, not less than two thousand "contrabands," who had escaped from plantations, and supposed themselves safe within our protecting lines.

This is an ill-looking side to our account current in Louisiana, but Gen. Banks is not to blame. If he shall be so fortunate as to capture Port Hudson, he will make short work in restoring his sway in the country commanded by Berwick's Bay.

Richmond Literature.—The prolific press of Richmond has just furnished the rebel public with a dramatic production, entitled the "Royal Ape." The publisher has not favored us with a copy of it for review, and we have only been privileged to read such portions of it as have appeared in the Richmond newspapers. We are not told who or what the "Royal Ape" may be; but we should imagine it referred to Jeff. Davis, the Richmond pretender, or, if we are to judge by the following monkey speech, we should think the title not inapplicable to Beauregard.

"Enter Beauregard, amid acclamations.

Beauregard—Cheer ye, my braves! Ye have great cause to cheer! I bring you glorious tidings: Kirby Smith leads a fresh column! On the enemy he flings his thunderbolts. From yonder hill I saw their heavy ranks, disjointed, reel like shivering reeds before the dark tornado. Ring out your shouts yet louder! lift your caps! Lo! the brave President! now greet him lustily!

(Davis appears in the distance on a white horse, with hat in hand, bowing deliberately to the soldiers amid great acclamations.)

He comes to share a common grave with you, or join his shouts," &c.

Fancy the above scene being enacted on the classic boards of Richmond, and fancy the point of degradation to which the rebellion has reduced the Southern intellect.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

Washington, Sunday, July 5.

Hon. Elihu Washburne, Senator Wilkinson, and Commissioner Dole, arrived on the evening train

GEN. SICKLES.

Gen. Sickles was brought here to-day in the morning train. He was carried on a litter to his quarters in F street, escorted by a guard of honor. Enthusiastic sympathy is felt by citizens and officials for this gallant soldier. His right leg was shattered below the knee by a round shot, in such wise as to render amputation necessary five inches above the knee. The operation was performed skillfully, without much loss of blood. The General is weak, but cheerful, and apparently doing excellently. His personal staff and Dr. Sims, Medical Director of the Third Corps, attend him. This afternoon the President, accompanied by his son and a mounted escort, rode on horseback to Gen. Sickles' door and went up to visit him. To-night he has slight fever, but is very comfortable.

THE FOURTH.

There was unusual satisfaction here, yesterday, in the celebration of the national holiday, consequent upon the proclamation of the President, and his official announcement of the successes at Gettysburgh. The exercises in the grounds of the Executive Mansion passed off creditably. Gen. Walbridge's address was attentively received by crowds of well-dressed people. Everything was quiet and orderly about the town.

CAVALRY.

Extraordinary efforts continue to be made to develop our cavalry force in numbers and organization.

Celebration of the Fourth at Binghamton.

SPEECH OF HON. H. J. RAYMOND.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

Binghamton, Saturday, July 4.

The day was celebrated here with great spirit and enthusiasm. In spite of the threatening aspect of the weather, the town was crowded at a very early hour with people from the surrounding country, collected to participate in the proceedings. A grand procession was formed at 10 o'clock, and an audience of not less than five thousand assembled in a beautiful grove near the village. Hon. D. S. Dickinson presided, and made some very spirited opening remarks on the condition of the country. Rev. Mr. Lightner read the Declaration of Independence, and Hon. H. J. Raymond, of your City, delivered the oration. He spoke extempore, and was heard with the utmost attention. After referring to the achievement of an independence from Great Britain as an event always to be celebrated, whatever might be the internal condition of the country, he spoke of the adoption of the Constitution as the great event in our political history, inasmuch as it was that which created the nation. He examined the nature and extent of the sovereignty which that Constitution confers upon the General Government, showing that it embraced everything necessary to secure the enforcement of the law, against individuals or communities that might resist it. He showed also that our Constitution provides a perfect substitute for revolution as a means of redressing wrongs, and that the present rebellion finds no shadow of excuse either in the action of our Government or in the principles of the Declaration of Independence. He urged the necessity of maintaining the authority of the Government, and of preserving the integrity of the Union as, for the present, paramount to all other questions whatever, and urged toleration, patience, courage and patriotic perseverance as absolutely essential to the rescue of our country from its perils.

After the oration a splendid dinner was provided at the American, at which toasts were given, speeches made, &c.

Prizes at Key West—War Vessels in Port.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Key West, Monday, June 29, 1863.

Quite a number of captures have been brought in since my last letter, among which are the following: Schooner Pouchmatahee, with cotton; schooner Star, captured by steamer Brooklyn, with cotton; sloop Kate, assorted cargo, captured by bark Pursuit; schooner Rebeka, assorted cargo, captured by schooner Jas. S. Chambers; schooner Harriet, assorted cargo, captured by steamer Tahoma; schooner Sarah Jane, assorted cargo, captured by steamer Tahoma; schooner Statesman, with cotton, captured by steamer Tahoma. This vessel was cut out by three boats from the Tahoma in the harbor of Tampa, under the continuous fire of the rebels.

Steamer Planter, from Mobile, 600 bales cotton captured by the sloop-of-war Lackawana after an exciting chase, during which they threw overboard 100 bales, and received one shot in her hull. Prize-master, A. Ensign Van Voorhies.

Also, British steamer Neptune, by the same, after a long chase, during which they had thrown overboard the entire cargo, consisting of $10,000 worth of assorted merchandise, from Havana. This is a very fast boat, two hundred feet long, with side-wheels, draws only five feet, and is about 16 feet beam. Will make an excellent cruiser. Prize-master, P. M. Owens, Fifteen prize vessels have been sold during the last two weeks, and many of them have been purchased by known blockade-runners. In some instances the same men who, at New-York bond their shipments of merchandise for Nassau, not to be sold to run our blockade. The vessels have generally brought good prices.

There is a large number of vessels now in our harbor, viz.: War Vessels—Steam-gunboats Alabama, Kensington, and Huntsville; flagship steamer Magnolia; sloop-of-war Dale; bark gunboat Gem of the Seas. Merchant Vessels—Ships Constellation, Wallace, Tranquebar; barks Alex. McNeil; brig Ann E. Mullen; schooners Enchantress, Surprise, and steamers Key West and Illinois, and about forty prize vessels, including eight steamers. The schooner Surprise, laden with prize cargoes, put back in a leaking condition, after being out three days, bound for New-York.

The good health of the island continues to be uninterrupted, and the weather is warm. Thermometer at 86. No rain for four weeks. F.

FROM PANAMA.

Later News from Central America—The Quarrel between Salvador and Guatemala, &c.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

Panama, Friday, June 26, 1863.

The Panama Railroad Company's steamer Guatemala, arrived here on the 30th ult., with twenty-five passengers and the following freight:

For Southampton—214 cerroons cochineal and 1 parcel samples.

For Liverpool—84 bags coffee; 82 cerroons cochineal; 1 bag silver ore; 8 bales deerskins; 41 bales cotton.

For New-York—51 bags coffee; 2 cerroons cochineal; 11 bales deerskins; 14 bales cotton; 425 hides; 2 cases merchandise.

For Aspinwall—4 bales deer skins.

For South Pacific—343 bags coffee, 29 cerroons indigo, 1 parcel samples.

For Panama—13 cases balsam, 51 packages merchandise, 12 cases cigars, 3 bales hats, 36 bags coffee, 306 hides, 1 bale tanned hides, 76 packages sugar, 2 bales mats.

Specie for England	$22,380 00
Specie for South Pacific	406 00
Specie for Panama	3,210 62½
Total	25,996 62½

The Guatemala brings dates from Guatemala to the 10th, from Salvador to the 12th, Nicaragua to the 15th and Costa Rica to the 18th inst. There is scarcely anything in the way of news brought by this arrival. Carrera had left Guatemala on the 7th inst., with a force for another attempt at invading Salvador. Gen. Barrios, of the latter country, is said to be well prepared for the reception of his enemy, and little doubt is entertained that Carrera will be defeated as badly in this expedition as he was some months ago. The people of Salvador are very enthusiastic in their preparations against Carrera. A loan of some $350,000 has been subscribed to the Government to enable the President to carry on the war.

Gen. Jerez, who was so badly defeated in his invasion of and attempt to revolutionize Nicaragua, is reported to be at La Union, Salvador, with a force of 800 men, with which he contemplates another attack upon President Martinez.

Jerez has but little chance of success, since Martinez will be able to bring against him a much superior force, and has lately found means to quiet much of the dissatisfaction that previously existed in reference to his Government.

The British mail steamer Solent, from Greytown the 19th inst., arrived at Aspinwall on the 20th. Gentlemen who came down with the Solent, and who had been over the Transit Company's route, represent that it is almost impossible for the Company to take the passengers now due over the route. The water in the river was very low, and it is said that the agent of the Transit Company had announced his intention to order the expected steamers to Aspinwall and Panama respectively, unless there should occur a considerable rise in the river. From Costa Rica there is nothing new. All was quiet, and the Government showed a determination to keep out of the squabbles that are now harassing the other Central American States.

The Assemblea of Panama is still in session. The new State Constitution comes up to-day for a final vote. It fully proclaims the doctrine of State Sovereignty, and will undoubtedly be passed.

The next measure to be considered by this Legislature is a new law in regard to the time and manner of holding elections. It will probably occupy the body for the next two weeks, after which there is a probability that attention will be devoted to deposing the present Governor, Señor Diaz and quarreling about who shall be his successor. All quiet in the interior.

THE BLOCKADING SERVICE.

Two Steamers and a Sloop Captured in the Gulf.

Washington, Sunday, July 5.

Capt. Marchand, of United States steamer Lackawanna, reports to the Navy Department, under date of June 14, that at daylight the previous morning, whilst at anchor off Mobile, a black smoke was seen from a steamer, and by signal from the senior officer, gave chase, gaining gradually upon the vessel. She was kept in sight until 2 o'clock on the morning of the 14th, when it became quite dark, and sight of her was lost. At daylight, however, she was discovered eight miles distant. Notwithstanding the exertions she made to escape, by frequently changing her course, burning oily substances in her furnaces, throwing overboard her cargo, etc., the Lackawanna gained upon her, and nearing her, she hoisted the British ensign, and did not stop her engines until several shots were fired. She was a fast vessel, and the Lackawanna had to run 109 miles before she was captured, which took place in lat. 25° 42′ North, lon. 85° 32′ West. She was found to be the iron paddle-wheel steamer Neptune, of Glasgow, bound from Havana to Mobile. During the chase most of the cargo was thrown overboard, as well as the mail and the principal part of the ship's papers.

Another report from Capt. Marchand, dated at sea, June 15, says:—"At 9 o'clock this morning, on the return of this ship toward Mobile, in company with the steamer Neptune, captured yesterday, the black smoke of a steamer was seen ahead, for which this ship, as well as the Neptune, gave chase. She was not brought to until a shot struck her, which did no injury, however, and she was captured after having been chased 26 miles. She was the rebel steamer Planter, of Mobile, of 313 tons, and left Mobile Bay on the night of June 13, for Havana, with a cargo of 625 bales of cotton and 124 barrels of resin. During the chase between 60 and 80 bales of cotton were thrown overboard, and several barrels resin burned.

Lieut. Commanding Eaton, of U. S. steamer Circassian, reports to the Department, dating off New Orleans, June 23, the capture of the rebel sloop John Wesley, which had evaded the blockade of St. Mark's, Fla., on 13th ult., and was bound to Havana laden with cotton. She was sent to Key West for adjudication.

Amusements.

The Wallackians in Brooklyn.—On the Fourth of July the Academy of Music, in the City of Brooklyn, was a busy place. In the morning the Long Island Historical Society held their grand powwow in its beautiful auditorium; in the afternoon "Black-Eyed Susan" and the "Goddess of Liberty" caused alternate weepings and rejoicings; while in the evening the "Little Treasure," "Handy Andy," and a duplicate representation of the "Goddess" aforesaid appealed to the sympathies of a crowded house. Miss Madeline Henriques was the belle of the afternoon, and the bright particular star of the evening. At her feet Young Brooklyn lavished its wealth and floral tribute, and her disappearance was the signal for one long melancholy wail. Miss Emily Thorne, Mr. Charles Fisher and Mr. and Mrs. Floyd were well received, and mightily amused and delighted the house.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO.

The Occupation of the Capital by the French.

Forey's Triumphal Entry Made on the 10th of June,

HIS PROCLAMATION TO THE INHABITANTS

Removal of the Government to San Luis Potosi.

HAVANA, Tuesday, June 30, 1863.

By way of Santiago de Cuba, we have the important news of the occupation of the City of Mexico by the French on the 3d of this month, without any resistance on the part of JUAREZ. The latter had previously withdrawn with the rest of the Government and the State authorities to San Luis Potosi, declaring this last-named city the capital of the Mexican Republic. The above important intelligence was brought here by the Pajaro del Oceano, which arrived at our port yesterday morning from Santiago de Cuba, on her return voyage from St. Thomas, Porto Rico, Puerto Plata and various ports of this island. The above information was brought from Vera Cruz by the French mail steamer of the St. Nazaire line, the Vera Cruz, and was published in the papers of Santiago de Cuba on the 25th inst.

The news of the occupation of the City of Mexico on the 3d, was conveyed to Vera Cruz by a courier, who arrived on the 13th inst. with dispatches from Gen. FOREY, directed to the commander of that place, announcing the event.

Gen. FOREY made his public entry into Mexico on the 10th of this month.

The following is a translation of the official dispatch of the commander of Vera Cruz, mentioning this event:

To the Sub-Prefect of Vera Cruz:

EXPEDITIONARY CORPS OF MEXICO,
VERA CRUZ, June 13, 1863.

Mr Sub-Prefect:—I have the honor to inform you officially, that Mexico has been occupied by the French army; the Commander-in-Chief was to make his public entry into the above named city on the 11th.

Have the kindness to publish this news in the city, and communicate it to the editor of the paper.

J. MUNIER,
Chief of Battalion, Chief Commander ad interim.

A deputation of foreign consuls left Mexico to inform Gen. FOREY that there was no resistance in the Capital, and on the approach of Gen. BAZAINE, another deputation of the inhabitants entreated him to expedite his entrance in order to prevent any excuse for disorder.

The executive and legislative authorities belonging to JUAREZ' Government, with the employes, seized on leaving every means of transport.

The prompt departure of a division against San Luis was announced.

By another courier who left Mexico City on the 5th, and arrived at Vera Cruz on the 9th, the following additional particulars were made known:

The capital was occupied on the 3d inst., at 7 P. M., by 600 men of the Seventh regiment infantry. (Chasseurs-à-pied.)

Gen. SALAS had taken charge of the government of the district.

During the non-existence of public authorities in which Mexico was left, a guard of foreigners was organized to preserve the public order.

The forces of JUAREZ, which left Mexico, took three different routes, Queretaro, Morelia and Cuernavaca. JUAREZ, with the Government, the Congress, and the public officers, and a few troops, took the road of Queretaro. Gen. MEJIA, it is said, was at Atroyoguico, to cut off his passing that way.

Three thousand men, under the orders of RAMON and AMPUDIA, who were marching in the direction of Morelia, were attacked at Monte de las Cruces and completely routed by Gen. BAZAINE, leaving in his possession 500 prisoners, six pieces of artillery, and two ammunition wagons.

MARQUEZ, with the France-Mexican forces, occupied the town of Guadalupe.

CUELLAR's cavalry have again occupied the high roads, and are employed in easing travelers of their baggage.

Col. JEANNINGROS, commander of the foreign regiment, has been appointed Chief of Vera Cruz and the Tierra Caliente.

The following prisoners from Puebla embarked for France on the 9th in the steamers Darien and Ceres: 13 Generals, 24 Colonels, 35 Lieutenant-Colonels, 50 Commanders, 132 Captains, 159 Lieutenants and 137 Sub-Lieutenants.

On board of the French steamer Vera Cruz, which left Santiago de Cuba on the 23d, was M. GALLEPET, an officer of the Imperial household, who takes the keys of Mexico and the military trophies. He is said to have stated at Santiago de Cuba, while the French steamer was lying there, that there had been sent to France in two ships-of-war about 600 officers, from the General down to the Captain, and that there would be embarked 700 more in two other vessels for the same place, and as prisoners.

The Eco del Comercio, of Vera Cruz, a paper in favor of the intervention, says as follows in its issue of the 12th inst.:

"From the commanders and officers, prisoners, who passed through this city and were embarked for Brest on the 6th, we have learned some curious episodes that occurred at Puebla.

In the first place, they confirm the news that in the commissariat of the army of the east there were at the time of surrendering the city, provisions for only two days; but that in the private houses there was plenty of flour and other articles which would have been sufficient to maintain for some time more the troops, if the principal commanders had been willing to continue defending the city.

They also confirm the news that in publishing the General Order for a surrender there were three rounds of cartridges for each man. As the defenders of Puebla amounted to 18,000 men on the 17th of last month, it results that there remained 555,000 shots to fire, more than necessary to fight a battle and force a way through. This ammunition was thrown into the water.

At the meeting of Generals and superior officers held before the surrender, Gens. NEGRETE, GHILARDI and PAINEO were in favor of forcing their way through. The opinion of the majority directed by the will of GONZALES ORTEGA prevailed, who was decidedly influenced by Gens. MENDOZA and PAZ. This majority determined to surrender.

One of the Generals's prisoners has assured us that they did not attempt to force a way through by main force, because they did not reckon the firmness of the soldiers, who began to be mutinous.

Some soldiers who have arrived at Vera Cruz maintain that the spirit of the troops had drooped, because whilst they were subject to privations, fatigues and dangers, the commanders were constantly feasting, enjoying every kind of luxury.

In general we have heard censured by superior officers, officers and privates, the behavior of ORTEGA during the siege and after surrendering as prisoner. They say that during the siege he was never seen in a dangerous place, that he only thought of dressing and perfuming himself, and being present at banquets; they say that after the surrender of the city, his character of Commander-in-Chief, the respect which the French army merited, his military honor and the circumstance of having constituted himself prisoner of war, imposed upon him the duty of following the future of his comrades in ill luck.

Gen. FOREY, on the 4th, published the following general order:

GENERAL ORDER—SOLDIERS: After a siege in which you have shown a brilliant valor, united to a constancy and perseverance, without which complete success is not obtained, you have forced a garrison of 18,000 men to lay down their arms, and surrender at discretion. Twenty-six Generals, more than 300 superior officers, and from 600 to 900 subaltern officers, and a large amount of equipments, with 140 cannon—such are the trophies of your victory, which has opened to you the gates of Puebla—of that city, whose name an enemy, insolent and blind by their pretended victory of the 5th of May, of late, had charged in remembrance of that day, or which future, of whom you had asked too much, was treacherous to you, of that city which, in their pride, the Government of JUAREZ considered impregnable, and which was to be our sepulchre.

And this victory which you have obtained with weaker means than those which the enemy had accumulated for more than a year in this city, which had been changed into a fortified place of the first rank, gives you the right to be proud.

But nothing has been done whilst something yet remains to be done. It is in Mexico City that is found the knot of the Mexican question, it is there that it must be cut by the sword of France. Your material means are more powerful than those that you have brought in front of Puebla. Your number has been rather increased than diminished, your valor is the same, and whatever may be the resistance prepared against you, those already conquered at Puebla, at San Lorenzo, and wherever they have dared to measure swords with you, you will conquer as you always have done.

Forward, therefore, soldiers, let us march to the capital to the cry of "Long live the Emperor," which will announce to a city bent under a yoke of iron, that the banner of France is approaching, and brings it freedom.

HEADQUARTERS AT PUEBLA, June 4, 1863.

FOREY,
Commander-in-Chief, &c.

The following is the proclamation which Gen. FOREY addressed to the Mexicans on the day of his entrance into the Capital:

MEXICANS: I will not take even an instant of rest before I have expressed to you all my gratitude for the brilliant reception that you have given to-day to the valiant army which I have the honor to command. I have not expressions sufficient to signify to you what my heart has experienced; but I have contracted this day, which will leave for all my life the sweetest remembrance, a sacred duty; and that is to labor incessantly to give you what you most desire, peace, order, in fine and true liberty.

I reckon, therefore, on all true Mexicans assisting me in the accomplishment of my mission, which I will easily do, if you place in me your entire confidence, listening to the advice which I give you from this moment; not to excite the passions by means of writings, libels, representations, pamphlets, &c., for all such things would be inconsiderate and premature.

When an edifice has been destroyed, it can only be reconstructed by degrees. If one wishes it to be really substantial. Have, therefore, patience and with the Divine protection, in which I place all my confidence, we will conquer the difficulties of the great work of regeneration, in which we must all labor with one mind.

MEXICO, June 10, 1863. FOREY.

The General of Divison, Senator, Commander-in-Chief of the Expeditionary Corps of Mexico, in consultation with the Receiver General, Special Treasury Commissioner, orders:

ARTICLE 1. The exportation of money until further orders is prohibited, except the money in a person's purse or pocket, and that of silver and gold in bullion through the ports of the Republic occupied by the French army, whatever may be their place of destination, the country of the remitter, or the nationality of the ship in which it is shipped.

The quantities which the Consuls of England and Spain may have to transmit are not included in this prohibition, provided they pertain to indemnities due to their people, and are the product of the customs intended for the payment of stipulations.

ART. 2. The sending of gold or silver money in bullion, from a place or city occupied by the French army, to any other place or city that are in the power of the enemy, is prohibited.

ART. 3. The officers or employes of any work whatever of the Customs or Internal Revenue, are authorized to seize all sums, except those in the purse or pocket, and gold or silver in bullion that may be exported from a place that has submitted, to the intervention to another that has not recognised it.

ART. 4. Any person that acts against this order will be punished with a fine not less than 25 per cent. of the amount of the quantity or value of the gold and silver in bullion which the defrauders may have attempted to conceal from the watchfulness of the Custom-house officers.

ART. 5. One half of the fine to be given to the seizure and the other half to go to the public Treasury.

ART. 6. In cities where civil Courts have been organized, the act of seizure will be tried before them so that they may give their verdict upon the penality that shall be imposed, all of which will be done at the cost of the defrauder. In other places where Courts do not exist, the military commander of the place will take cognizance of the offence.

ART. 7. The Collectors of Customs will enter the amounts of fines in a special branch entitled, "Proceeds of fines received for infractions of the decree of the 24th of May of the current year, relative to the exportation of money and of gold and silver in bullion."

ART. 8. The Receiver-General, Special Commissioner of the Treasury, is charged with the execution of the present decree, which will be fixed in all places of the Republic that have submitted to the intervention, and be published in the official bulletin of the army.

Given in Puebla the 24th of May 1863. FOREY, General of Division, Senator, Commander-in-Chief of the Expeditionary Corps.

By order of the French Commander at Vera Cruz, a subscription had been opened in that city to assist the poor families of the prisoners taken by the French army.

The Eco del Comercio of the 16th gives the following account of the events that took place after the occupation of Mexico by the French, and of the public entry of FOREY, as given in an official dispatch:

"As soon as JUAREZ and his followers left the capital, the inhabitants rose en masse against the wicked, demagogic regime. Letters that we have received from the capital describe the joy, the enthusiasm, the delirium of the people as something that had not been seen, perhaps, since the entrance of the army under the order of the liberator ITURBIDE.

The ringing of bells, firing of cannon, and demonstrations of joy, did not cease even for a moment.

Several papers, decided supporters of the intervention, had immediately appeared."

The following is the official communication giving an account of the entry of Gen. FOREY into Mexico:

JUNE 14, 1863.

Mr. Sub-Prefect:

The entry of the commander-in-chief into Mexico took place on the 10th inst., with the greatest pomp. The enthusiasm of the people was indescribable; the streets were strewed with flowers; the people rushed with delirium to where the Generals and his Staff were passing. After having assisted at a Te Deum in the Cathedral, which was completely full, Gen. FOREY received the deputation, and manifested to them his sympathies and his desire which everybody shares, to see order and peace reestablished in this fine country, torn to pieces for so long a time by war and civil dissensions.

G. MUNIER, Head Commander ad interim.

The above named paper gives the following programme to celebrate the entrance of the Franco-Mexican army into Mexico.

The entrance of the France-Mexican army into this Capital will take place on the 10th at 5 o'clock P. M.

At 9 o'clock, precisely, there will be assembled at the place prepared in the garish of San Lazaro, the City Governor, his suite and all those persons who wish to accompany him, the National Corps of Invalids, formerly the guard of honor, to await there his Excellency Gen. FOREY, and to put him in possession of the City as a friend and ally, addressing to him for that purpose a short speech.

This ceremony terminated the army will continue its march by the streets Maravillas, the square of Santillima, up and on to the principal square, when a salute of thirteen guns will be fired. His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief and other persons of the Committee, will proceed to the Metropolitan Church to assist at the T. Deum, which will be poured out in action of thanks to the Almighty for the triumph of the cause of order. During this ceremony the French and Mexican flags will be raised in the cathedral, the latter occupying the right hand, on the National palace only the French, and on the city palace only the Mexican, saluting them with twenty-one guns.

His Excellency will afterward proceed to the National palace, where the City Governor, with his suite, will await him, to deliver up to him the command and put him in possession of the edifice, addressing him in another short speech.

The troops will file before the palace, and will proceed to their respective quarters.

Triumphal allegorical cars, with bands of music, will pass through all the streets of the city, which are to be suitably adorned, and at night there will be handsome fireworks, consisting of Bengal lights and rockets, thrown continually from mortars placed in the principal square, Soledad, Santa Cruz, and at the corners of the Alameda and Hospital for the poor. A grand concert will take place in the principal square, which all the people can enjoy. They will last from 7 until eleven o'clock at night.

The public and private buildings will be illuminated.

MEXICO, June 9, 1863.

OUR HAVANA CORRESPONDENCE.

The Story About the Vanderbilt and the Alabama—Rebel News—St. Domingo—Hayti, &c.

HAVANA, Tuesday, June 30, 1863.

The rumor of a naval combat between the Vanderbilt and Confederate Alabama, as given by a Porto Rico paper, has not been confirmed by any fresh intelligence. Since the arrival of the steamer from Porto Rico which brought the news, the English mail steamer Trent has arrived from St. Thomas, and now the Spanish steamer, the Pajaro del Oceano, from the same place, both of which bring no news whatever upon the subject, and as the battle was said to have taken place at the island of Santa Cruz, near to St. Thomas, if such an event had taken place, we should have had ample particulars by either of the above steamers.

The Havana newspaper, the Siglo, of to-day, gives the following as news from the South:

"A private letter, received by the steamer Corsica, brings the news that JOHNSTON attacked GRANT and was repulsed with great loss, there being no longer any hope of saving Vicksburgh.

The above-named letter was taken to Nassau by the steamer Hews, which succeeded in running the blockade, and was brought from there by the Corsica on her way hither from New-York. The person who says that he saw the letter is to be relied upon.

The same news has been communicated to us verbally as obtained from a passenger of the Hews, who is now in this city."

ST. DOMINGO.

The correspondence to the Havana papers from St. Domingo says that complete tranquility prevails, but it appears from a proclamation published by the Captain-General of the Spanish part of that island to the Gaceta, that this complete tranquility is in a very shaky condition.

"A complete amnesty has been published by royal order; first, for all those who have been banished abroad on account of the ancient political disturbances of the late Republic, and, secondly, for all who were compromised in the late events at Cibao, the trials of whom are ordered by royal decree to be immediately stopped, and the parties to be set at liberty, free from all costs.

The sale of arms not permitted by the law had been prohibited; but the use of swords, the ordinary large chopping knives of the country, holster pistols, revolvers and fowling-pieces were allowed, with the previous Government permission.

HAYTI.

The opening of the Legislative Chamber took place on the 1st of last month, when President GEFFRARD pronounced the usual discourse. After having given a slight sketch of the alarming state of the Republic at the close of the last Legislature, he declared his determination to do his duty.

Referring to foreign relations, he observed that with the acknowledgment of the sovereignty of Hayti by the United States, a new impulse would be given to commercial transactions between the two countries. He hoped that the question of territory with the Spanish Government would be satisfactorily adjusted. Two new legations had been instituted, one to the Court of Madrid, and another to the United States. The finances of the country were progressing favorably, and the economy introduced would allow of the application of a part of the surplus to public works, and particularly to the improvement of the highways.

By the steamer Geffrard, which arrived at Port-au-Prince on the 19th, with the Secretary of War on board, there had been received late ligence of the execution of St. Marc, of Gen. Legros and the brother Cousin, his uncle Dupuis, Viane, Eugene Vieux, Vicomte Carios and two others. Maxaire Bonsses, another of the condemned to death, was awaiting the orders of the President, and several others had been sentenced to perpetual imprisonment. These were the leaders of the late abortive insurrection in this country.

VENEZUELA.

In the Boletin of Porto Rico of the 18th inst., brought by the Pajaro del Oceano we find the following:

"From Maracaybo they write the following, which we do not wish to see confirmed.

On the 11th there arrived from Laguayra, a schooner, and, according to what the Captain says, affairs continued very bad in that country, for notwithstanding the convention agreed to by FALCON and PAEZ that the Federal forces should enter and occupy Caracas, and that afterward an assembly should be convoked to appoint the Provisional Government until the election of President took place, on the Federals entering the city, a revolution broke out, on which account the ship was detained a day, from there being no one to attend to matters and clear her. On the day that he left, a severe contest was raging, and the firing of musketry could be heard at sea from Laguayra.

A letter from St. Thomas mentions that the district of Carabobo has not accepted the convention agreed to by Gens. FALCON and PAEZ, and that troops had left Puerto Cabello to attack Laguayra."

The Compilador, of Mayaguez, speaking of the same, says:

"On the night of the 6th there disappeared from the roads of Laguayra, the war-steamer Venezuela and a schooner, likewise of war, which were awaiting orders from the Government.

On the 7th, at daybreak, the steamer entered Puerto Cabello and received on board two battalions under the command of Gen. LEANDRO MARTINEZ. On the 8th it re urned to Laguayra, firing salutes, which were answered by the batteries of the place; the troops landed with cheers for Gen. MARTINEZ, which were repeated by the garrison of the place, commanders, officers and privates fraternizing.

The new Spanish Chargé d'Affaires for Venezuela presented his credentials to the Secretary-General on the 16th, the ceremony being witnessed by a large number of persons, including many Spaniards of distinction.

OPERATIONS ON THE PENINSULA.

Col Spear's Brilliant Cavalry Exploit—The Capture of Brig.-Gen. W. H. Lee.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

IN THE FIELD, WHITE HOUSE, VIRGINIA,
Sunday Night, June 28, 1863.

Another evidence of the utility of the cavalry arm of military service has just been furnished the country by Col. SPEAR and his Eleventh Pennsylvania mounted regiment. A few more such only will be needed to awaken the Government and the people to a sense of the great mistake committed at the outbreak of the war by the War Department in ignoring, so peremptorily as it did, in the case, for instance, of Col. MORRISON's Northern Black Horse mounted organization, this most serviceable branch of the military science. This (Sunday) morning Col. SPEAR returned to White House after a most brilliant, dashing and successful cavalry exploit.

On Thursday last the 25th inst., Col. SPEAR, commanding the Eleventh Pennsylvania cavalry, accompanied by a detachment of two companies of the Second Massachusetts, and two companies of the Twelfth Illinois, left White House, on the Pamunky River—the whole comprising a force one thousand strong. The undertaking had for its object spoliation, destruction of property, and the discomfiture of all rebels whom they might meet in the direction of Richmond, added to the obtaining of all the information of the number of the forces at present hid and around the so-called Confederate Capital. At about 10 o'clock Thursday A. M., the 25th, the expedition took up its line of march in the direction of Tunstall Station a squad of the Second Massachusetts cavalry acting as the advance guard. As there was nothing to be accomplished at Tunstall Station, a movement on Barrett, a point 10 miles from Richmond, was made, where the forces encamped for the night. At daylight the next morning the expedition moved with the utmost celerity to Hano er Court-house, a distance of 24 miles from White House, and a point directly north of Richmond, reaching there at 9 o'clock in the morning. Just here "the plot thickened" in an admirable and spirited charge made by a squad of the Second Massachusetts and Co. A, of the Eleventh Pennsylvania, under command of Capt. RINGLAND, Lieuts. BARKELEY and BAKER, with Lieut. TITUS, in the somewhat anomalous, though useful capacity of Acting Aid. The charge was made upon the adjacent station and was successful, resulting in its capture, together with a train of one hundred wagons and the destruction of the telegraph line. From this point a movement having in view the destruction of an important bridge on the Pamunkey, and in which Company A, SPEAR's cavalry, (Eleventh Pennsylvania,) held the advance, was made. When within a mile of the bridge, Lieut. F. A. BAKER, with his extreme advance, charged upon and captured the advance picket of the enemy, consisting of a Lieutenant, whose name is not known and six men. On moving further down the river, the rebels showing themselves in considerable force, Col. SPEAR ordered the Second Massachusetts riflemen to dismount, and Companies A and G of his regiment to move forward in support of a couple of Eleventh Pennsylvania howitzers. Sharp and decisive firing caused the enemy, who appeared to be about three hundred strong, to retreat in "skedaddling" confusion. As they did so, our troops occupied a block house and several lines of earthworks running close to the bridge, and on both sides of the railroad track. At this time the carabineers of the second Massachusetts, and a few men of Col. SPEAR's command, with howitzers, moved down to the edge of the river, and engaged the enemy with great sharpness. Lieut. BLAKE, with his advanced guard, proceeding further down the river, discovered a ford about a half a mile below the bridge. On reporting this fact to Col. SPEAR, he immediately ordered Companies A and G of his command to cross and attack the enemy in the rear, which they did. Upon charging the earthworks, these companies were temporarily repulsed and driven back a short distance, whereon Col. SPEAR instantly ordered Companies E and M to move up in reinforcement. Under command of Major SERATTON, who ordered line of battle to be formed on two sides of the enemy's works at the same time directing Lieut. HOBBS, of Company E, to take a few dismounted carabineers and, moving along the river bank, attack the enemy on the river flank. So soon as these preliminary arrangements were completed, Major SERATTON ordered Capt. SEELY to charge the enemy's works with his command. This feature of the reconnoissance was one of the most creditable of any similar one since the inauguration of hostilities. It was, indeed, gallantly done. The carabineers at the same time charged the block-house from the river side, under the auspices of Col. SPEAR. Lieut. ROYER, Adj. MORRISS, Capt. ROBBINS and several other officers were with the carabineers. The struggle here was intense in its character, being a terrible hand to hand conflict. Victory crowned our side. In this attack First Sergt. MCFARLAND, of Company B, Eleventh Pennsylvania cavalry, fell while gallantly fighting, pierced through the heart by a bostile bayonet. Sergt. MCFARLAND was ever brave, ever dutiful, and ever ready to die for his country. His name must be added to the long list of the Union heroes who have nobly sacrificed their lives for their country. The conflict lasted about ten minutes, and in it several lives were lost. The enemy lost nine killed and twenty wounded. I may not omit to mention that Capt. RINGLAND's company made a charge in support of SEELY, and that during the fight a charge was made upon a line of skirmishers in front of the Union line of battle, who were commanded by Lieut. BLAKE, by the enemy's cavalry, who were most successfully repulsed. The result of this feature of the reconnoissance was the undisputed possession of the bridge, and the capture of a Lieutenant-Colonel, six officers and 130 prisoners of war, who were sent down the river to-day. The bridge and block-house were burned, the track torn up and several culverts destroyed. After this our forces fell back to Hanover Court-house, where Major SERATTON, of Col. SPEAR's command, had been left to destroy the trains and culverts at the station, which he accomplished. It was here that Brig.-Gen. WILLIAM H. LEE, (not Gen. FITZHUGH LEE,) a nephew of the rebel Lee, Commander-in-Chief of the traitors, and who was wounded at Beverly Ford, was found recruiting at the farm-house of a widow. He was, however, in a condition admitting of removal, and was taken by order of Col. SPEAR. Our forces continued moving down the river, crossing about six miles below Hanover Court-house, encamping for the night on a rebel farm. On the morning of the 26th the troops reached White House by way of King William Court-house. In addition to the results already stated, the troops captured forty good army wagons, and upwards of four hundred mules and horses. Throughout the expedition our scouting parties were frequently fired on by the enemy hanging on our flanks, doing no other damage, however, than the capturing of one private.

I have thus given a plain narration of the facts touching this brilliant affair. From them the country will be able to judge of the high military character and ability displayed by Col. SPEAR, who so successfully accomplished this daring but important undertaking.

The sale of the Plantation Bitters is without precedent in the history of the world. There is no secret in the matter. They are at once the most speedy, strengthening health-restorer ever discovered. It requires but a single trial to understand this. Their purity can always be relied upon. They are composed of the celebrated Calisaya Bark, Cascarilla Bark, Dandelion, Chamomile Flowers, Lavender Flowers, Wintergreen, Anise, Clover Buds, Orange peel, Snake-root, Caraway, Coriander, Burdock.

S.—T.—1860—X. &c.

They are especially recommended to clergymen, public speakers, and persons of literary habits and sedentary life, who require free digestion, a relish for food, and clear mental faculties.

Delicate females and weak persons are certain to find in these Bitters what they have so long looked for.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They overcome effects of dissipation and late hours.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Diarrhœa, Cholera and Cholera Morbus.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.
They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak man strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer.

The following startling and emphatic statements can be seen at our office.

Letter of Rev. E. F. CRANE, Chaplain of the 107th New-York regiment:

NEAR AQUIA CREEK, March 4, 1863.

Owing to the great exposure and terrible decomposition after the battle of Antietam, I was utterly prostrated and very sick. My stomach would not retain medicine. An article called Plantation Bitters, prepared by Dr. DRAKE, of New-York, was prescribed to give me strength and an appetite. To my great surprise they gave me immediate relief. Two bottles almost allowed me to join my regiment. * * * * I have since seen them used in many cases, and am free to say, for hospital or private purposes I know of nothing like them.

Rev. E. F. CRANE, Chaplain.

Letter from the Rev. N. E. GILES, St. Clairsville, Pa.

GENTLEMEN: You were kind enough, on a former occasion to send me a half dozen bottles of Plantation Bitters, for $3 50. My wife having derived so much benefit from the use of these Bitters, I desire her to continue them, and you will please send us six bottles more for the money inclosed.

I am, very truly, yours,
N. E. GILES, Pastor German Reformed Church.

DR. VON EISENBERG.

Author of "Surgical and Practical Observations on the Diseases of the Ear, with his new Mode of Treatment."

NEW TESTIMONY.

NEW-YORK, May 6.

I was entirely deaf in my left ear, accompanied by a discharge. I placed myself under Dr. VON EISENBERG's care, who, by his great skill, restored me to perfect hearing, in the short space of a few minutes, without giving me the slightest pain, and the discharge has ceased entirely. The Eustachian Tube, which was obliterated, is quite open, and I feel that the air-passage performs its functions. I am amply satisfied, and recommend every one suffering from impaired hearing to place themselves under the treatment of this eminent and successful physician.

THOMAS GRANAN, No. 529 6th-av."

NEW-YORK, May 7, 1863.

I have great pleasure to testify to the skill of Dr. VON EISENBERG. I went into his office almost completely deaf, and came out with my perfect hearing. It is nearly twelve months since, and the hearing is perfect. The operation, which lasted two or three minutes in each of my ears, gave me no pain whatsoever. I, with confidence, recommend all sufferers to place themselves under Dr. VON EISENBERG's unsurpassing skill.

SAMUEL C. HUNT,
No. 6 Meserole-av., Greenpoint, L. I."

No. 138 MADISON-ST., NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1863.

I have been completely deaf in one ear, and partially so in the other, for above seventeen years, with a disagreeable discharge from both ears, combined with continual rumbling noise in the head, for which I have been treated by a most eminent practitioner in the City without the slightest relief.

I consulted Dr. Von Eisenberg, but I must candidly say that I had no faith in his success when I did so. It is, therefore, due to Dr. Von Eisenberg to acknowledge that I am entirely cured; also, that he displayed that skill and knowledge which have procured for him such an unrivaled reputation. As I have had an opportunity of comparing his mode of treatment with that of others, I can truly state that it is not only superior, but the principles which direct his mode of restoring the hearing are, in my opinion, certain.

JOHN TAYLOR.

NEW-YORK, July 19, 1862.

This certifies that my mother has been for some time afflicted with partial deafness, suffering from pain, and rumbling noises in the head, together with other indications of a total loss of hearing. Dr. Von Eisenberg removed from her ears a great quantity of matter, together with congulated blood, relieving her instantaneously, and all without pain. It is with grateful thanks that I give this testimony to his skill.

CARROLL J. POST, No. 29 South-st.

SIGHT RESTORED.

JUNE 25, 1863.

My daughter brought me to Dr. VON EISENBERG almost completely blind in both eyes. I could not bear the pain nor the light. I am completely cured by Dr VON EISENBERG, and called now to express my gratitude to the Doctor for his skill and unremitting attention, by which I recovered one of the most precious senses to me after being deprived of it for four years. It is only due to Dr. VON EISENBERG to state that I have tried several physicians in vain. I shall be happy to bear personal testimony to Dr. VON EISENBERG's unrivaled success to any lady or gentleman who will call on me.

LAKE ERIE AND ALBANY RAILROAD COMPANY.

FIRST MORTGAGE SINKING FUND BONDS.

The Lake Erie and Peoria Railroad Company, in the State of Indiana, now offer for sale their entire issue of $600,000 First, and only, Mortgage Bonds, bearing seven per cent. interest, payable semi-annually in the City of New-York.

These bonds are secured by a DEED OF TRUST, constituting the FIRST and ONLY lien upon the entire Road, its franchises, appurtenances, rolling stock, &c.

Its route is along the White Water Valley, from Rushville to Union, a distance of about sixty miles, and passes through the richest, best cultivated and most densely populated portion of the State of Indiana.

The road is the CENTRAL SECTION of the otherwise completed TRUNK LINE, connecting the great South-west at LOUISVILLE, Ky., on the Ohio River, and at an early day with TOLEDO and SANDUSKY, on Lake Erie.

The Company is wholly without debt (except its bonded debt) and being strong in its local traffic, and connecting with roads that must necessarily largely increase the volume of its revenues, the BOARD OF DIRECTORS, with great confidence, invite the attention of capitalists to these securities, believing that they offer an opportunity for a first-class railroad investment of which, in their judgment, there is no better to be

The published exhibits of the Company, together with a map showing the locality and advantages of the Road, can be had from either of the Trustees of the Deed of Trust, in this City, named below, or from either whom the bonds are only to be had.

The Despatches from Jeff. Davis to Lee.

The contents of the dispatches captured Thursday, from DAVIS to LEE, are in substance: A peremptory order for Lee to withdraw from Pennsylvania; an order for his transportation to fall back to Hagerstown instantly; assigning as a reason that the position of LEE is too hazardous, the condition of Richmond too defenceless, to warrant his remaining in Pennsylvania longer—that the advantages there to be gained are not sufficiently great to compensate for the risk he runs. He also refuses LEE's request to have BEAUREGARD re-inforce him, and orders him South of the Potomac forthwith.

THE REBELS REPORTED IN FULL RETREAT.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

The American has just put upon its bulletin the important announcement that the rebel army is in full retreat, which was commenced on Friday night.

Many thousand prisoners and a large number of cannon are captured.

THE REBEL PONTOON BRIDGE DESTROYED.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

The following has just been received.

FREDERICK, July 4—8 P. M.

To Gen. Halleck:

An expedition by me last night has just returned, having entirely destroyed the enemy's pontoon bridge over the Potomac at Williamsport.

We captured the guard, a Lieutenant and thirteen men. W. H. FRENCH, Major-General.

THE POTOMAC IMPASSABLE.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

The recent rains have swollen the Potomac thus rendering the river unfordable, an important fact in view of military operations. The water in some places in the Upper Potomac is said to be eight or nine feet deep.

The city is jubilant to-night over the latest war intelligence from Pennsylvania.

REPORTED MOVEMENTS OF STUART'S CAVALRY.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

In consequence of information that STUART was about to make a raid upon our rear this afternoon, KILPATRICK was sent out on our right. Some cannonading was heard, but up to 9 o'clock he had not returned to camp. Should the enemy be found here in the morning, the Fourth of July will receive an additional cause for commemoration.

OUR OCCUPATION OF GETTYSBURGH.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

The messenger who brought the account of Friday's battle says:

We advanced and occupied Gettysburgh during Friday night, without opposition.

Firing was heard early Saturday morning toward Gettysburgh, supposed to be our forces pursuing LEE.

Gen. NEAL is under treatment.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

Dispatches received from the army state that the enemy was discovered to be retreating at 3 A. M. on Saturday. It is believed that LEE cannot get off without great loss. Gen. FRENCH captured and destroyed his pontoon bridges at Falling Water.

The highest anticipations are expressed by the Government. There is a striking contrast between the anxiety of a week ago and the present tranquil, expectant confidence.

LATER. News arrives from Baltimore confirming the largest statements of Gen. MEADE's success. Your army correspondents will doubtless send full details. The public joy is unbounded.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

Dispatches from Gen. MEADE, dated yesterday morning, (4th,) state that the rebel army had withdrawn from his front, but whether for a retreat or as a manœuvre, was not then known.

Nothing has been received here up to this time, (Sunday noon,) so far as can be ascertained, conflicting with this intelligence.

The importance of the dispatches from JEFF. DAVIS and the rebel Adjt.-Gen. COOPER, to Gen. LEE cannot be overrated. They reveal the objects of LEE's campaign, and the cause of its failure, and also the present views of the rebel Government.

Gen. SICKLES arrived here to-day. His left leg has been amputated, but it is thought that he will recover.

The reports concerning the death or capture of LONGSTREET and A. P. HILL, are still conflicting.

The Potomac is very high.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

About three hundred members of the Twenty-seventh Maine regiment, Col. WENTWORTH, who volunteered to remain beyond their time, while Washington was threatened, have been relieved by the War Department, and left for home yesterday (Saturday) evening. Medals of honor are to be awarded them.

Maj.-Gen. FRENCH yesterday succeeded in reaching Williamsport by a forced march from Frederick with considerable force, and has destroyed the pontoon bridge and train of LEE, which the latter left in position there to serve for emergencies.

Maj.-Gen. SICKLES reached here by rail this morning. Though suffering from loss of his leg, his physical condition is thought to be improving.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday Afternoon, July 5.

A sensation report is current here that 20,000 rebels, and 118 guns have been captured, and that LEE asked an armistice of 48 hours to bury his dead and take charge of his wounded, to which Gen. MEADE replied that an unconditional surrender could only be entertained. No confirmation of these reports received.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 5.

The Journal publishes the following in an extra:

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5—11:30 A. M.

The war-correspondent of the Journal has just arrived from yesterday's battle-field. He states that the rout of Gen. LEE was thorough and complete. Gen. MEADE has not only captured 20,000 rebels, but recaptured all our own troops, who were previously in the hands of the enemy.

Three o'clock P. M.—It is really true that LEE has been totally routed, and is seeking to escape. PLEASANTON cut off his retreat in the Gap leading to Chambersburgh.

We took 118 pieces of artillery, and from 15,000 to 20,000 prisoners, and all they took of us in the first day's fight. We hold the town of Gettysburgh and all the hospitals. It is a complete victory.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 5—11 P. M.

A gentleman who lives on the road to Fayetteville, fifteen miles from Gettysburgh, and who arrived today, says that at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, he heard heavy firing which continued until dark. This morning it again commenced at an early hour and continued till 7 o'clock, but not nearly as heavy as the night before. He left at 9 o'clock and the firing had not been renewed. The sound was in the direction of Gettysburgh.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM HARRISBURGH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

The city to-day has been jubilant over the news received from the Army of the Potomac.

This afternoon Gov. CURTIN received a dispatch from Philadelphia confirming the report that Gen. MEADE had captured 25,000 prisoners, 118 pieces of artillery, and a pontoon bridge at Williamsport.

The news is in circulation to-night that LEE has surrendered his entire force to Gen. MEADE. Gov. CURTIN has not yet an official confirmation of the same, but expresses his belief that if LEE has not already surrendered he will do so to-morrow.

One thousand paroled Union prisoners came in from Gettysburgh to-day, and were sent to Philadelphia. Deserters from the rebel army are coming in from all quarters.

The militia force under Gen. W. F. SMITH has advanced to important positions. Chambersburgh is occupied by our troops. Gen. SMITH took one hundred prisoners to-day. WHIT.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM HANOVER, PENN.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, July 4.

Col. FORNEY, of the Press, received the following highly important dispatch, to-night, from the Army of the Potomac:

HANOVER, Penn., Saturday, July 4—5 P. M.

There has been no fighting up to this time to-day. Last evening we drove the enemy back to Gettysburgh. Our lines this morning extend eight miles around Gettysburgh, our batteries being on all the hills looking on the town from the south. We occupy Roundtop Ridge, commanding the Chambersburgh turnpike, and have cut off all the lines of retreat. Our forces occupy the strongest possible position; a flank movement on our left is impossible.

At about 8 o'clock last night, the Florida brigade of Gen. LONGSTREET's division, with a Brigadier-General in command, advanced within our lines, and gave themselves up with their colors.

A bearer of dispatches from JEFFERSON DAVIS to Gen. LEE has been captured. The dispatches order Gen. LEE peremptorily to return to Richmond, and state that the movement into Pennsylvania was wholly against his wishes.

The following were among the officers killed in yesterday's engagement:

Col. TAYLOR, of, the Bucktail regiment, a brother of BAYARD TAYLOR.

Lieut.-Col. MILES, of the same regiment.

Lieut. MANTON, of Philadelphia, was wounded.

Maj. KERNEY, of the Eleventh New-Jersey, was wounded in the knee.

We have captured about eight thousand prisoners.

DETAILS OF WEDNESDAY'S BATTLE.

From Our Special Correspondent.

BATTLE-FIELD NEAR GETTYSBURGH, THURSDAY, July 2, 1863—12 M.

The engagement yesterday was very sharp, and one of the bloodiest, for its duration, yet encountered by the Army of the Potomac. It was entirely between our Advance Guard, the First corps, supported subsequently by the Eleventh, and the combined forces of the rebel Generals HILL and EWELL.

WADSWORTH's Division, which encamped Tuesday night at Marsh Creek, five miles south of Gettysburgh, moved forward in the morning, and at 10 A. M., were at Gettysburgh. Half a mile beyond the town they met the rebels in force, who were advancing rapidly. Gen. REYNOLDS, apparently under the impression that the force was not more than equal to his, immediately attacked the enemy with great vigor, and drove them back, capturing 400 prisoners, including one Brigadier-General (ARCHER) on the spot. It was just before this, while forming the line of battle, that Gen. REYNOLDS was killed by a rebel sharpshooter, concealed near by, who shot him through the head. The enemy had taken a position which was very strong, but our men, with fixed bayonets, drove them from it. WADSWORTH, with two brigades, now became hotly engaged, and held the position fully an hour unsupported. The second division, under Gen. ROBINSON, then became engaged, and also one brigade of Gen. DOUBLEDAY's command, his division being commanded by Col. ROWLEY after Gen. REYNOLDS was killed. DOUBLEDAY being assigned to the corps. About half-past one o'clock, the Eleventh corps arrived on the field from Emmetsburgh, and formed on the right of the First corps, but did not get engaged until 3 P. M. The fighting on the left now became very heavy, the enemy pouring in large masses of troops on both flanks. But our men stood their ground with great tenacity, especially the First corps. WADSWORTH's and ROBINSON's divisions, aided in the most gallant manner by Col. ROY STONE's brigade, of Gen. DOUBLEDAY's division.

Two lines of the enemy, who advanced against WADSWORTH's division, were literally crushed, nearly every man being killed or wounded, so accurate was the aim of our men—especially of Gen. Sol. MEREDITH's brigade of Western men.

At length the enemy displayed a strong force on each flank, and compelled our men to fall back, they having no supports within reach. This they did in good order, passing through the town to just the southern and eastern edge of it, where a new position was taken on a range of high hills circling around the town from north to south.

The Eleventh corps in action was commanded by Gen. SCHURZ. His division was on the right of WADSWORTH's, and Gen. BARLOW's on the right of SCHURZ's, with STEINWEHR's in reserve. The conduct of the corps partially redeemed the reputation lost at Chancellorsville, though in coming through the town, in retiring, there was considerable confusion, and a great many stragglers were lost. There was very little artillery in the early part of the fight. HALL's Second Maine battery distinguished itself, as also did STAKE's Battery B, Fourth artillery, who mowed the rebels down by hundreds.

We lost no artillery, and by 6 o'clock Gen. HANCOCK, who had been ordered up to take command on the field, arrived, and, with Gen. HOWARD's assistance, soon formed new lines to the east and south of the town. We still occupied a portion of the place, but the enemy held the most of it, and with it many of our wounded, who were brought there during the fight.

The principal portion of the fight took place near the Pennsylvania College, which building is now used by the enemy as a hospital.

By dark the Twelfth, Third and Second corps had arrived as reinforcements, and Gen. SLOCUM was temporarily in command.

Gen. MEADE arrived about 9 o'clock P. M., and immediately began making the dispositions to give or receive battle.

I send a duplicate list of such casualties among officers as I have thus far obtained—one to go by telegraph. The losses on both sides were very heavy. In MEREDITH's brigade, the loss reported this morning is 728 killed and wounded, out of 1,850 who went into the fight, and 400 more are yet unaccounted for.

Col. ROY STONE, of the Pennsylvania Bucktails, behaved with great gallantry, and was severely wounded. His brigade—the first time under fire—behaved like veterans.

There is no cause whatever for discouragement at the result of yesterday's fight. It was simply an advance of two corps engaged with two whole corps (two-thirds) of the rebel army.

Our forces are now all up, and dispositions are making for a grand attack. All the morning both armies have been deploying their columns, preparatory to a great contest. We occupy and hold the Baltimore pike, Taneytown road, and Emmettsburgh pike, all leading south and east to Baltimore and Washington.

The country is generally open and rolling, affording great opportunities for the use of artillery. There is not much timber, and the rebels have fewer advantages than heretofore. Our losses cannot at present be estimated. They are already among the thousands, and number some of our best officers.

Gens. REYNOLDS and PAUL are killed, the latter having died of his wounds this morning. Gen. BARLOW is severely wounded, and in Gettysburgh—a prisoner. Gen. SHIMPELPENING is a prisoner, but not hurt. Col. LUCIUS FAIRCHILD, of the Second Wisconsin, has lost his left arm, and is a prisoner, but he sent me word, last night, that he was doing well and in glorious spirits.

I have no time to send further particulars. The enemy are now feeling our line, preparatory, apparently, to making an attack. He may receive one before he can give one. Large masses of artillery are arriving and being put in position, there being many fine opportunities for its use.

The great fight will probably begin this afternoon, and continue through to-morrow.

LATEST FROM GETTYSBURGH.

The Retreat of the Rebel Army.

Lee Said to be Fortifying in the Mountains.

HARRISBURGH, Monday, July 6—1 A. M.

Official information leaves no doubt that LEE's army is in full retreat. The line of retreat is not definitely known. It is either through Cashtown or Fairfield; whichever way it is, Gen. MEADE appears to have the advantage, as he is posted at Gettysburgh, and is pushing out forces both toward Newman's Cut, directly west, and to Fairfield, southwest. Nothing is known as to the exact situation. LEE is probably trying to retreat by both routes.

It is supposed that he does not know of the destruction of the pontoon bridge.

The position of the rebel army last night was, with his left near Hunterstown, and his right across the Emmettsburg road, thus forming a semicircle around Gettysburgh. Gen. MEADE operates from the centre, and LEE on the arc of a circle,

No information can be sent as to the movements of our army, but all our Generals are vigilant, and the troops in the best of spirits.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

The American's intelligence from the battle-field, up to 10 o'clock this morning, represents the rebels holding a position in the mountains, near Cashtown, and fortifying. Gen. MEADE has advanced to the enemy's lines. There has been some skirmishing, but no battle. PLEASANTON has captured a large train of the enemy and many prisoners. The enemy left all his wounded in our hands, and thousands of dead. He is believed to be retreating toward Hanocock. There is no truth in the report of the capture of LONGSTREET or HILL. There is a dead Major-General in our hands—name unknown.

The enemy is undoubtedly seeking to escape.

The body of Brig-Gen. S. K. ZOOK, killed in the battle of Thursday, reached here yesterday from Westminster, in charge of Lieut. BOOKS and Lieut. FAVILLE, of his Staff. Gen. ZOOK, although appointed from New-York, was born in Montgomery County, Pennsylvania. He commanded the Third brigade, First division, Second corps, (HANCOCK's.) His remains will leave for Philadelphia to-day. Gen. GIBBON, commanding the Second division of HANCOCK's corps, who was wounded in the shoulder in the engagement of Friday, reached here yesterday in company with Lieut. MOALE of his Staff. The General's wound is not dangerous, and he is doing well.

Maj. BATES, Inspector-General on Gen. GIBBON' Staff, was wounded in the foot. Capt. D. G. WOOD, Assistant Adjutant-General of Gen. GIBBONS' Staff, and Lieut. HASCALL, were both slightly wounded.

THE LOSSES.

HEADQUARTERS ARMY OF THE POTOMAC, Sunday, July 5.

The rebel Gen. PENDER is wounded. Gens. KEMPER and JOHNSON, rebels, are killed. Gen. FARNSWORTH, of our cavalry, is killed. The rebel losses are estimated at 20,000.

Our troops are in the highest spirits. Gen. BUTTERFIELD's wound is more than was expected, but is not at all serious. The rebels abandoned their killed and wounded. T. B.

PRISONERS EN ROUTE TO BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

Eight hundred and fifty rebel prisoners, largely composed of Alabama troops, captured from LONGSTREET's corps in Wednesday's fight, arrived here this morning. More prisoners are announced at the depot, and accounts from up the road say there are large trains at various points, on their way down, whilst there are said to be acres of them awaiting transportation.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

Twenty-three hundred prisoners have just passed along Baltimore-street from the Northern Central depot, and 1,00 more are shortly expected, which will make 5,050 or to-day. This is but a small installment, it is said, of all who are to come. While passing through the streets some parties had the bad taste to raise cheers of triumph, which induced the rebels to give their peculiar yell for JEFF. and the Southern Confederacy. In addition to the 5,000, eight hundred and thirty passed through here on Friday night, which will make the entire number, so far, nearly six thousand.

THE WOUNDED IN THE RECENT BATTLES.

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

The following correspondence, by telegraph, took place to-day:

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

Surgeon-Gen. Hammond, Washington:

Our people over the State are exceedingly anxious to render aid and assistance to the wounded at Gettysburgh. Will you say how many volunteer Surgeons I may send. You may be assured that our people will take the wounded to their houses, and render every assistance that the most careful nursing may demand, and that our public buildings can be used as hospitals to any extent. Inasmuch as the battle occurred in Pennsylvania, I ask that our people, at least, be not removed out of the State. You will readily notice the propriety of this, and the interest it will certainly be to the public service in future.

(Signed,) A. G. CURTIN.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5—8½ P. M.

To Gov. Curtin:

Pennsylvania troops will be cared for, as far as possible, in Pennsylvania. Five thousand vacant beds in Philadelphia, which have been ordered, will be first filled. We have plenty of hospital-room prepared, where the wounded will be more comfortably cared for than in any extemporized hospitals. The Medical Director of the Army of the Potomac has plenty of surgical aid.

By order of the Surgeon-General.

JAMES R. SMITH, Assistant Surgeon-General.

IMPORTANT FROM TENNESSEE.

The Enemy Driven Out of Winchester.

Gen. Rosecrans Pressing Bragg Closely.

Special dispatch to the New-York Times.

TULLAHOMA, Monday, July 6—9 A. M.

Maj.-Gen. THOMAS has succeeded in crossing the Elk River, with his corps and a division of cavalry, under Gen. STANLEY, and is in close pursuit of BRAGG's army, with every prospect of capturing their wagon train and rear guard.

Maj.-Gen. SHERMAN occupied Winchester this morning, his advance driving out the rear guard of the rebels, and at last accounts he was pushing them hard.

It is thought that BRAGG can hardly cross the mountains without suffering a severe loss, and perhaps being forced into a battle. Our loss during the campaign in killed is between 400 and 500; wounded, about 300. The enemy's loss is more than double, besides about 1,000 prisoners; and, without a battle and the necessary loss of life, the enemy have been driven out of Tennessee. W. SWINTON.

TULLAHOMA, Saturday, July 4.

The telegraph wires have been extended to this place.

The following is a summary of the movements for the last three days:

Further developments proved that the rebel retreat from this place had not been so clear as my first dispatch indicated. Haste to record the event induced me to give but a superficial examination. The work are much stronger than I supposed. Fort Rains, a large bastion, is the centre of a series or circle of outer works, bearing upon every road and important point in the vicinity of Northern Tennessee. The weakness of BRAGG was in not holding Manchester. As soon as Gen. ROSECRANS took Manchester, and advanced toward Winchester, he flanked any equal or inferior force at Tullahoma. As soon as the head of the columns got south of Tullahoma, BRAGG evacuated.

Instead of one, we have four siege guns; instead of "stores" we have a large amount of meal and other provisions. After finding on the 1st inst. that Tullahoma was evacuated, ROSECRANS threw forward his force in rapid pursuit, Gen. THOMAS moving on the Manchester road from Tullahoma. Gen. THOMAS moved rapidly in the hopes of striking the enemy, moving nearly due east on the military road built by BRAGG. This Gen. THOMAS waited to do until the enemy was well beyond the angle, and when he was crossing Elk River, the division of Gen. NEGLEY encountered the rear of HARDEE at a point about four miles north of Elk River, and skirmished with it all day, losing four or five killed and wounded. Among the prisoners were Lieut. PLATT, of the Eleventh Michigan.

The enemy's rear-guard, under WHEELER, made a stubborn resistance, delaying Gen. NEGLEY, so that the rebel trains got beyond the river during the night of the 1st. This same process, on the part of Gen. BUCKNER, enabled Gen. BRAGG, with the reserve artillery, twenty pieces, to cross Elk River at Estell Springs on the night of the 1st, and to reach the mountains. The enemy on both roads burned the bridges, and the rear-guards took up positions in hastily-built works on the opposite side of the river. It was understood this was for the purpose of delaying our crossing as long as possible, in order to enable the infantry and trains to get into the mountains. To aid them in this very heavy rains came up, and the river rose very high. Natives say they never saw the river so high.

The situation on the night of the 1st was: McCOOK at Estell Springs, with BUCKNER opposite the forks; THOMAS at a point 20 miles up the river, with the enemy on the opposite bank. The main rebel army was in the vicinity of Winchester and Dechard, in camp, ready to move on the 2d into the mountains. Department headquarters were on the same night established at Tullahoma. Gen. CRITTENDEN, with a full corps, was sent by a rapid march to take possession of the road leading from Dechard, via Tracey City, to Chattanooga. This was successful, and forced the enemy to take the roads across the mountains. On the morning of the 2d McCOOK crossed at the mouth of Rock Creek, below the enemy's position, in front of our right, and thus flanked the enemy, who withdrew to Winchester and the mountains.

At the Upper Bridge, where NEGLEY was posted similar manœuvring was made with little better success. ROSSEAU and BRANNAN were sent to the Upper crossing, to come down in the rear of the enemy, whom NEGLEY was to detain, not drive. It was thought that ROSSEAU could cross by 10 A. M., but the swollen state of the river prevented, and only a few troops got across in time. Meantime a cavalry brigade came in upon the right flank of the enemy. The firing was mistaken for that of ROSSEAU, and NEGLEY opened with two batteries on the enemy's position, 1,000 yards distant, dismantling one gun and killing several rebel gunners. They were taken completely by surprise, and made but few replies, retreating precipitately. Meantime TURCHIN had engaged the rebel right, and, after a fight of two hours, drove it and the entire rebel force from the field, killing 35 of them.

The fight only ended at 2 P. M. The troops were unable to cross until the morning of the 3d. They moved only a short distance, NEGLEY encamping on the battlefield, and ROSSEAU and BRANAN on the bank of the river. McCOOK meantime advanced to and occupied Winchester, Dechard and Cowan. This morning the whole force advanced to the foot of the mountain at Cowan, to find the enemy gone.

We lost not over 1,100 men by casualties of all kinds. The troops suffered much from alternate heat and rain. We have 1,500 to 2,000 prisoners, many of them deserters.

The enemy is entirely out of Tennessee, and our communication intact. The railroad will be running to this point to-morrow.

THE SIEGE OF VICKSBURG.

OFFICIAL ADVICES TO JUNE 29.

Everything Going on Cheeringly.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5—8:25 P. M.

Official dispatches from Vicksburgh, to the 29th June, have been received.

Everything is going on cheeringly.

MEMPHIS, Thursday, July 2, Via CAIRO, Friday, July 3.

Advices from Vicksburgh to the 29th ult., are received.

Although no positive advantages resulted from the springing of Gen. McPHERSON's mine, yet that officer vigorously pressing the rebels caused them to spring a counter mine on Gen. SHERMAN's front, but the only damage done was to destroy the head of his approach, which a day's work will clear up.

Col. WOOD is raising the guns of the gunboats Cincinnati, and three of them are now in position on the bluff.

The rebels keep up a constant fire, but our casualties are not numerous.

The weather is extremely warm, but the nights are cool and refreshing.

Gen. JOHNSTON is in the vicinity of Canton, preparing for a forward movement.

VICKSBURGH, Monday, June 29—Evening.

Our forces were withdrawn to-day to the outer side of the contested fort to the front of Gen. LOGAN, in consequence of some advantages of position, which enable the enemy to throw shells into our position, thus endangering the lives of our men without present benefit.

The withdrawal, however, is temporary.

A sharp musketry fire is still maintained.

The total casualties in this last struggle are not known, but it is believed they will not exceed 200.

Soldiers Drowned.

SANDY HOOK, Friday, July 3.

A. CROFT and ALFRED DAY, members of Company E, New-York artillery, were drowned to-day at this place, while bathing. Their bodies have not yet been recovered.

HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED
STOMACH
BITTERS.

READ AND REFLECT.

Make sure of HEALTH. "But how?" you ask.
We answer, 'tis an easy task.
Strengthen the STOMACH, and sustain
The NERVES, the servants of the brain.
The LIVER keep in active play
And regulate, from day to day.
Each organ aid, on Nature's plan,
Brace and refresh the INNER MAN,
And like a watch, that's kept in chime
By constant care, with railroad time,
The system's tone and strength renew,
And thereby cheer the spirits, too.
"How," you inquire, "can this be done?
This Victory o'er Disease be won?"
"HOSTETTER'S BITTERS," we reply,
Is HEALTH'S SUPREME PROTECTION—TRY.

As a means of regenerating the disordered and enfeebled system, regulating every function of the internal organs, reviving the depressed spirits, invigorating the constitution, and prolonging life, no medicinal preparation, either of the past or the present time, has been so completely and universally successful as
HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

Against the vapors foul prepare,
That fever-taint the heavy air,
Drink not unmixed the water found
In prairies, woods, or marshy ground.
If sedentary toil you ply,
Nature you must assist—or die—
For when debarred from exercise
For artificial aid she cries.
Medicine's grand purpose and intent
Is threatened evil to prevent:
And if you'd be relieved or spared
From ills that crush the unprepared,
Hostetter's Bitters use—for note
They are the SUREST ANTIDOTE.

To set at defiance the miasma of unhealthy soils, the poison of unwholesome water, the effluvia of crowded workrooms and factories, and the baneful influence of sedentary employments, it is only necessary to be forearmed with
HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

Dyspepsia's pangs, that rack and grind
The body, and depress the mind;
Agues, that as they go and come,
Make life a constant martyrdom;
Colics and dysenteric pains,
'Neath which the strong man's vigor wanes,
Bilious complaints, those tedious ills,
Ne'er conquered yet by drastic pills;
Dread diarrhœa that cannot be
Cured by destructive mercury;
Slow constitutional decay
That brings Death nearer, day by day;
Nervous prostration, mental gloom—
Heralds of madness or the tomb:
For these—though mineral nostrums fail—
Means of Relief at least we hail,
HOSTETTER'S BITTERS—medicine sure,
Not to prevent, alone, but cure.

In dyspepsia, fever and ague, bilious complaints, constitutional and nervous debility, constipation, seasickness, spasms, and in all complaints of Man or Woman, proceeding from casual or inherent weakness of the body, the one great remedy and restorative is
HOSTETTER'S CELEBRATED STOMACH BITTERS.

To wanderers on sea or land,
From Polar shore to Tropic strand;
To households lone, in regions new,
And dwellers in great cities, too;
To soldiers in camp, fort and field,
Who need against disease a shield;
To miners, California bound,
And tillers of wet, marshy ground;
To feeble wives of fragile mold,
To young and middle-aged, and old;
To those in health, who would enjoy
Heaven's best gifts without alloy;
To all the strengthless, weak and pale,
Who droop, yet know not what they ail,
Hostetter's Bitters we present
As Health's most potent element.

If there is any value in public opinion, or any weight in medical testimony, the very best and safest Tonic, Corrective and Alterative now before the world is

The Despatches from Jeff. Davis to Lee.

The contents of the dispatches captured Thursday, from DAVIS to LEE, are in substance: A peremptory order for Lee to withdraw from Pennsylvania; an order for his transportation to fall back to Hagerstown forth with; assigning as a reason that the position of LEE is too hazardous, the condition of Richmond too defenceless, to warrant his remaining in Pennsylvania longer—that the advantages there to be gained are not sufficiently great to compensate for the risk he runs. He also refuses LEE's request to have BEAUREGARD re-inforce him, and orders him South of the Potomac forthwith.

THE REBELS REPORTED IN FULL RETREAT.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

The American has just put upon its bulletin the important announcement that the rebel army is in full retreat, which was commenced on Friday night.

Many thousand prisoners and a large number of cannon are captured.

THE REBEL PONTOON BRIDGE DESTROYED.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

The following has just been received.

FREDERICK, July 4—8 P. M.

To Gen. Halleck:

An expedition by me last night has just returned, having entirely destroyed the enemy's pontoon bridge over the Potomac at Williamsport.

We captured the guard, a Lieutenant and thirteen men. W. H. FRENCH, Major-General.

THE POTOMAC IMPASSABLE.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

The recent rains have swollen the Potomac thus rendering the river unfordable, an important fact in view of military operations. The water in some places in the Upper Potomac is said to be eight or nine feet deep.

The city is jubilant to-night over the latest war intelligence from Pennsylvania.

REPORTED MOVEMENTS OF STUART'S CAVALRY.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

In consequence of information that STUART was about to make a raid upon our rear this afternoon, KILPATRICK was sent out on our right. Some cannonading was heard, but up to 9 o'clock he had not returned to camp. Should the enemy be found here in the morning, the Fourth of July will receive an additional cause for commemoration.

OUR OCCUPATION OF GETTYSBURGH.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

The messenger who brought the account of Friday's battle says:

We advanced and occupied Gettysburgh during Friday night, without opposition.

Firing was heard early Saturday morning toward Gettysburgh, supposed to be our forces pursuing LEE.

Gen. NEAL is under treatment.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM WASHINGTON.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

Dispatches received from the army state that the enemy was discovered to be retreating at 3 A. M. on Saturday. It is believed that LEE cannot get off without great loss. Gen. FRENCH captured and destroyed his pontoon bridges at Falling Water.

The highest anticipations are expressed by the Government. There is a striking contrast between the anxiety of a week ago and the present tranquil, expectant confidence.

LATER. News arrives from Baltimore confirming the largest statements of Gen. MEADE's success. Your army correspondents will doubtless send full details. The public joy is unbounded.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

Dispatches from Gen. MEADE, dated yesterday morning, (4th,) state that the rebel army had withdrawn from his front, but whether for a retreat or as a manœuvre, was not then known.

Nothing has been received here up to this time, (Sunday noon,) so far as can be ascertained, conflicting with this intelligence.

The importance of the dispatches from JEFF. DAVIS and the rebel Adjt.-Gen. COOPER, to Gen. LEE cannot be overrated. They reveal the objects of LEE's campaign, and the cause of its failure, and also the present views of the rebel Government.

Gen. SICKLES arrived here to-day. His left leg has been amputated, but it is thought that he will recover.

The reports concerning the death or capture of LONGSTREET and A. P. HILL, are still conflicting.

The Potomac is very high.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5.

About three hundred members of the Twenty-seventh Maine regiment, Col. WENTWORTH, who volunteered to remain beyond their time, while Washington was threatened, have been relieved by the War Department, and left for home yesterday (Saturday) evening. Medals of honor are to be awarded them.

Maj.-Gen. FRENCH yesterday succeeded in reaching Williamsport by a forced march from Frederick with considerable force, and has destroyed the pontoon bridge and train of LEE, which the latter left in position there to serve for emergencies.

Maj.-Gen. SICKLES reached here by rail this morning. Though suffering from loss of his leg, his physical condition is thought to be improving.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM PHILADELPHIA.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday Afternoon, July 5.

A sensation report is current here that 20,000 rebels, and 118 guns have been captured, and that LEE asked an armistice of 48 hours to bury his dead and take charge of his wounded, to which Gen. MEADE replied that an unconditional surrender could only be entertained. No confirmation of these reports received.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 5,

The Journal publishes the following in an extra:

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5—11:30 A. M.

The war-correspondent of the Journal has just arrived from yesterday's battle-field. He states that the rout of Gen. LEE was thorough and complete. Gen. MEADE has not only captured 20,000 rebels, but recaptured all our own troops, who were previously in the hands of the enemy.

Three o'clock P. M.—It is really true that LEE has been totally routed, and is seeking to escape. PLEASANTON cut off his retreat in the Gap leading to Chambersburgh.

We took 118 pieces of artillery, and from 15,000 to 20,000 prisoners, and all they took of us in the first day's fight. We hold the town of Gettysburgh and all the hospitals. It is a complete victory.

PHILADELPHIA, Sunday, July 5—11 P. M.

A gentleman who lives on the road to Fayetteville, fifteen miles from Gettysburgh, and who arrived today, says that at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, he heard heavy firing which continued until dark. This morning it again commenced at an early hour and continued till 7 o'clock, but not nearly as heavy as the night before. He left at 9 o'clock and the firing had not been renewed. The sound was in the direction of Gettysburgh.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM HARRISBURGH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

The city to-day has been jubilant over the news received from the Army of the Potomac.

This afternoon Gov. CURTIN received a dispatch from Philadelphia confirming the report that Gen. MEADE had captured 25,000 prisoners, 118 pieces of artillery, and a pontoon bridge at Williamsport.

The news is in circulation to-night that LEE has surrendered his entire force to Gen. MEADE. Gov. CURTIN has not yet an official confirmation of the same, but expresses his belief that if LEE has not already surrendered he will do so to-morrow.

One thousand paroled Union prisoners came in from Gettysburgh to-day, and were sent to Philadelphia. Deserters from the rebel army are coming in from all quarters.

The militia force under Gen. W. F. SMITH has advanced to important positions. Chambersburgh is occupied by our troops. Gen. SMITH took one hundred prisoners to-day. WHIT.

HARRISBURGH, Penn., Saturday, July 4.

Best informed parties at headquarters are in excellent spirits at the news from Gen. MEADE. The battle is probably still in progress.

A gentleman who left Bridge No. 84 on the Northern Central Railroad at 3 o'clock this morning, heard heavy firing. It was also heard in Harrisburgh for about half an hour.

All is quiet in our immediate front. The rebels are supposed to have left this immediate neighborhood entirely.

The Sanitary Committee of Pittsburgh have forwarded a lot of supplies to this point.

Our wounded have been all brought from Carlisle to Harrisburgh, and are doing well.

Eighteen thousand men are in motion on the flank of the rebels.

Telegraphic communication is kept up with Gen. SMITH wherever he is.

A large number of men are at work on the Cumberland Valley Railroad, and trains run to Carlisle.

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5—1 A. M.

Most favorable news has been received here from the army of Gen. MEADE, but the details, which are mostly of a general character, cannot be obtained, as the censor is silent and the Governor has nothing.

The trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad will commence to run regularly on Monday morning. Not a bar of the road has been touched by the rebels.

No further danger is apprehended to the Northern Central Railroad, the repairs to which are nearly completed.

A gentleman who left the battle-field at Gettysburgh last night arrived here at noon. He came by way of York.

He says that the rebel pickets were posted five miles this side of Gettysburgh, and that the country between here and Gettysburgh may be safely traversed.

Our troops are in excellent spirits. They say universally that this battle is the most desperate the Army of the Potomac ever fought.

From the latest intelligence received here, it is fully believed that Gen. LEE's army has been completely defeated.

There has been no fighting to-day, and the rebel army is endeavoring to retreat through South Mountain Pass and Boonsboro.

It is certain that LEE's retreat is already seriously interfered with, and his escape from our army will be a matter of great difficulty.

A large force is concentrated here, and ready for offensive operations at any moment.

Nearly the full quota of Pennsylvania is already raised, and organized either in regiments or companies at Reading.

Col. DOUGLAS, volunteer Aid to Gen. SMITH's Staff, arrived here to-day, having been paroled by the rebels.

NEWS RECEIVED FROM HANOVER, PENN.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, July 4.

Col. FORNEY, of the Press, received the following highly important dispatch, to-night, from the Army of the Potomac:

HANOVER, Penn., Saturday, July 4—5 P. M.

There has been no fighting up to this time to-day. Last evening we drove the enemy back to Gettysburgh. Our lines this morning extend eight miles around Gettysburgh, our batteries being on all the hills looking on the town from the south. We occupy Roundtop Ridge, commanding the Chambersburgh turnpike, and have cut off all the lines of retreat. Our forces occupy the strongest possible position; a flank movement on our left is impossible.

At about 8 o'clock last night, the Florida brigade of Gen. LONGSTREET's division, with a Brigadier-General in command, advanced within our lines, and gave themselves up with their colors.

A bearer of dispatches from JEFFERSON DAVIS to Gen. LEE has been captured. The dispatches order Gen. LEE peremptorily to return to Richmond, and state that the movement into Pennsylvania was wholly against his wishes.

The following were among the officers killed in yesterday's engagement:

Col. TAYLOR, of, the Bucktail regiment, a brother of BAYARD TAYLOR.

Lieut.-Col. MILES, of the same regiment.

Lieut. MARTON, of Philadelphia, was wounded.

Maj. KERNEY, of the Eleventh New-Jersey, was wounded in the knee.

We have captured about eight thousand prisoners.

DETAILS OF WEDNESDAY'S BATTLE.

From Our Special Correspondent.

BATTLE-FIELD NEAR GETTYSBURGH, THURSDAY, July 2, 1863—12 M.

The engagement yesterday was very sharp, and one of the bloodiest, for its duration, yet encountered by the Army of the Potomac. It was entirely between our Advance Guard, the First corps, supported subsequently by the Eleventh, and the combined forces of the rebel Generals HILL and EWELL.

WADSWORTH's Division, which encamped Tuesday night at Marsh Creek, five miles south of Gettysburgh, moved forward in the morning, and at 10 A. M., were at Gettysburgh. Half a mile beyond the town they met the rebels in force, who were advancing rapidly. Gen. REYNOLDS, apparently under the impression that the force was not more than equal to his, immediately attacked the enemy with great vigor, and drove them back, capturing 400 prisoners, including one Brigadier-General (ARCHER) on the spot. It was just before this, while forming the line of battle, that Gen. REYNOLDS was killed by a rebel sharpshooter, concealed near by, who shot him through the head. The enemy had taken a position which was very strong, but our men, with fixed bayonets, drove them from it. WADSWORTH, with two brigades, now became hotly engaged, and held the position fully an hour unsupported. The second division, under Gen. ROBINSON, then became engaged, and also one brigade of Gen. DOUBLEDAY's command, his division being commanded by Col. ROWLEY after Gen. REYNOLDS was killed, DOUBLEDAY being assigned to the corps. About half-past one o'clock, the Eleventh corps arrived on the field from Emmetsburgh, and formed on the right of the First corps, but did not get engaged until 3 P. M. The fighting on the left now became very heavy, the enemy pouring in large masses of troops on both flanks. But our men stood their ground with great tenacity, especially the First corps, WADSWORTH's and ROBINSON's divisions, aided in the most gallant manner by Col. ROY STONE's brigade, of Gen. DOUBLEDAY's division.

Two lines of the enemy, who advanced against WADSWORTH's division, were literally crushed, nearly every man being killed or wounded, so accurate was the aim of our men—especially of Gen. SOL. MEREDITH's brigade of Western men.

At length the enemy displayed a strong force on each flank, and compelled our men to fall back, they having no supports within reach. This they did in good order, passing through the town to just the southern and eastern edge of it, where a new position was taken on a range of high hills circling around the town from north to south.

The Eleventh corps in action was commanded by Gen. SCHURZ. His division was on the right of WADSWORTH's, and Gen. BARLOW's on the right of SCHURZ's, with STEINWEHR's in reserve. The conduct of the corps partially redeemed the reputation lost at Chancellorsville, though in coming through the town, in retiring, there was considerable confusion, and a great many stragglers were lost. There was very little artillery in the early part of the fight. HALL'S Second Maine battery distinguished itself, as also did STUART'S Battery B, Fourth artillery, who mowed the rebels down by hundreds.

We lost no artillery, and by 6 o'clock Gen. HANCOCK, who had been ordered up to take command on the field, arrived, and, with Gen. HOWARD's assistance, soon formed new lines to the east and south of the town. We still occupied a portion of the place, but the enemy held the most of it, and with it many of our wounded, who were brought there during the fight.

The principal portion of the fight took place near the Pennsylvania College, which building is now used by the enemy as a hospital.

By dark the Twelfth, Third and Second corps had arrived as reinforcements, and Gen. SLOCUM was temporarily in command.

Gen. MEADE arrived about 9 o'clock P. M., and immediately began making the dispositions to give or receive battle.

I send a duplicate list of such casualties among officers as I have thus far obtained—one to go by telegraph. The losses on both sides were very heavy. In MEREDITH's brigade, the loss reported this morning is 728 killed and wounded, out of 1,850 who went into the fight, and 400 more are yet unaccounted for.

Col. ROY STONE, of the Pennsylvania Bucktails, behaved with great gallantry, and was severely wounded. His brigade—the first time under fire—behaved like veterans.

There is no cause whatever for discouragement at the result of yesterday's fight. It was simply an advance of two corps engaged with two whole corps (two-thirds) of the rebel army.

Our forces are now all up, and dispositions are making for a grand attack. All the morning both armies have been deploying their columns, preparatory to a great contest. We occupy and hold the Baltimore pike, Taneytown road, and Emmettsburgh pike, all leading south and east to Baltimore and Washington.

The country is generally open and rolling, affording great opportunities for the use of artillery. There is not much timber, and the rebels have fewer advantages than heretofore. Our losses cannot at present be estimated. They are already among the thousands, and number some of our best officers.

Gens. REYNOLDS and PAUL are killed, the latter having died of his wounds this morning. Gen. BARLOW is severely wounded, and in Gettysburgh—a prisoner. Gen. SHIMPLPFENNIG is a prisoner, but not hurt. Col. LUCIUS FAIRCHILD, of the Second Wisconsin, has lost his left arm, and is a prisoner, but he sent me word, last night, that he was doing well and in glorious spirits.

I have no time to send further particulars. The enemy are now feeling our line, preparatory, apparently, to making an attack. He may receive one before he can give one. Large masses of artillery are arriving and being put in position, there being many fine opportunities for its use.

The great fight will probably begin this afternoon, and continue through to-morrow.

PRISONERS EN ROUTE TO BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

Eight hundred and fifty rebel prisoners, largely composed of Alabama troops, captured from LONGSTREET's corps in Wednesday's fight, arrived here this morning. More prisoners are announced at the depot, and accounts from on the road say there are large trains at various points, on their way down, whilst there are said to be acres of them awaiting transportation.

BALTIMORE, Sunday, July 5.

Twenty-three hundred prisoners have just passed along Baltimore-street from the Northern Central depot, and 1,90 more are shortly expected, which will make 5,050 or to-day. This is but a small installment, it is said, of all who are to come. While passing through the streets some parties had the bad taste to raise cheers of triumph, which induced the rebels to give their peculiar yell for JEFF. and the Southern Confederacy. In addition to the 5,000, eight hundred and thirty passed through here on Friday night, which will make the entire number, so far, nearly six thousand.

THE WOUNDED IN THE RECENT BATTLES.

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

The following correspondence, by telegraph, took place to-day:

HARRISBURGH, Sunday, July 5.

Surgeon-Gen. Hammond, Washington:

Our people over the State are exceedingly anxious to render aid and assistance to the wounded at Gettysburgh. Will you say how many volunteer Surgeons I may send. You may be assured that our people will take the wounded to their houses, and render every assistance that the most careful nursing may demand, and that our public buildings can be usee as hospitals to any extent. Inasmuch as the battle occurred in Pennsylvania, I ask that our people, at least, be not removed out of the State. You will readily notice the propriety of this, and the interest it will certainly be to the public service in future.

(Signed,) A. G. CURTIN.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5—8¾ P. M.

To Gov. Curtin:

Pennsylvania troops will be cared for, as far as possible, in Pennsylvania. Five thousand vacant beds in Philadelphia, which have been ordered, will be first filled. We have plenty of hospital-room prepared, where the wounded will be more comfortably cared for than in any extemporized hospitals. The Medical Director of the Army of the Potomac has plenty of surgical aid.

By order of the Surgeon-General.

JAMES R. SMITH,
Assistant Surgeon-General.

THE SIEGE OF VICKSBURG.

OFFICIAL ADVICES TO JUNE 29.

Everything Going on Cheeringly.

WASHINGTON, Sunday, July 5—8:25 P. M.

Official dispatches from Vicksburgh, to the 29th June, have been received.

Everything is going on cheeringly.

MEMPHIS, Thursday, July 2, Via CAIRO, Friday, July 3.

Advices from Vicksburgh to the 29th ult., are received.

Although no positive advantages resulted from the springing of Gen. MCPHERSON's mine, yet that officer vigorously pressing the rebels caused them to spring a counter mine on Gen. SHERMAN's front, but the only damage done was to destroy the head of his approach, which a day's work will clear up.

Col. WOOD is raising the guns of the gunboats Cincinnati, and three of them are now in position on the bluff.

The rebels keep up a constant fire, but our casualties are not numerous.

The weather is extremely warm, but the nights are cool and refreshing.

Gen. JOHNSTON is in the vicinity of Canton, preparing for a forward movement.

VICKSBURGH, Monday, June 29—Evening.

Our forces were withdrawn to-day to the outer side of the contested fort to the front of Gen. LOGAN, in consequence of some advantages of position, which enable the enemy to throw shells into our position, thus endangering the lives of our men without present benefit.

The withdrawal, however, is temporary.

A sharp musketry fire is still maintained.

The total casualties in this last struggle are not known, but it is believed they will not exceed 200.

Soldiers Drowned.

SANDY HOOK, Friday, July 3.

A. CROFT and ALFRED DAY, members of Company E, New-York artillery, were drowned to-day at this place, while bathing. Their bodies have not yet been recovered.

STOMACH
BITTERS.

READ AND REFLECT.

Make sure of HEALTH. "But how?" you ask
We answer, 'tis an easy task.
Strengthen the STOMACH, and sustain
The NERVES, the servants of the brain.
The LIVER keep in active play
And regulate, from day to day.
Each organ aid, on Nature's plan,
Brace and refresh the INNER MAN,
And like a watch, that's kept in chime
By constant care, with railroad time.
The system's tone and strength renew,
And thereby cheer the spirits, too.
"How," you inquire, "can this be done?
This Victory o'er Disease be won?"
"HOSTETTER'S BITTERS," we reply,
Is HEALTH'S SU
